THE PSALMS OF DAVID,

Attempted in Verse,

REGULAR, IRREGULAR, IN THE WAY OF PARAPHRASE, &c.

BY SENEY,

A CLERGYMAN.

He fix'd his thoughts upon celestial things,
Seized David's harp and swept the golden strings.

" I love to breathe where Gilead sheds her balm,
" I love to walk on Jordan's banks of palm,
" I love to wet my foot in Hermon's dews,
" I love the promptings of Isaiah's muse;
" In Carmel's holy grots I court repose,
" And deck my mossy couch with Sharon's rose."

Psalms of David.

PSALM I.

BLESSED is he that hath not walk'd, as wicked men advise,
Nor wandered in paths of vice, where pride and scorn arise ;
But who delighting in the law, of Him whom we adore,
By night, by day meditateth, upon its sacred lore ;
That man shall flourish like a tree, which by the river grows,
Whose fruit is in due season ripe, whose leaf with verdure glows ;
His leaf also shall not wither, but bloom among mankind ;
While the ungodly trembling fly, like chaff before the wind :
In judgment they shall not stand up, nor with the just be found,
But be as strangers in the land, wide scattered around.

PSALM II.

Now why do all the nations rage? and false revilings bring,
Against the mighty Lord of Hosts, and his anointed King :
The rulers in fierce counsel join, and vauntingly they say,
“ Now let us break their iron bands, and cast their cords away ;”
But he who sits in Heaven above, at their vain words may smile,
Laugh at their boasting, and deride, their folly and their guile ;
For his displeasure they shall feel, and tremble at his wrath,
They shall be vexed, and quake with fear ; Lo ! the Almighty saith,
“ On Zion hill, I set my King, and this is the decree,
I now declare, this day my Son, I have begotten thee ;
Ask ! and the heathen I will give, for a possession free,
The uttermost parts of the earth, thine heritage shall be ;
Rule thou with iron rod, and all like potters’ vessels break,
Unless their judges and their kings, thy strong protection seek.”
Oh ! serve your God with fear, and kiss the Son lest angry he,
Destroy all them whose trust, O Lord ! and hopes are not in thee.

PSALM III.

Oh ! how the enemies encrease, who trouble me, O Lord !
Against my peace on every side, they rise with one accord,
My soul the raging multitude, seek to destroy and say,
Him now the God whom he adores, to save will not essay ;

THE PSALMS.

3

Yet surely he who raised me up, will my protector be,
He lifted up my humble head, high he exalted me;
And I to him will raise my voice, and call upon him still,
For he hath listened to my cry, out of his holy hill.
Behold! I laid me down and slept, and rose in peace again,
Because the Lord in whom I trust, himself did me sustain;
Ten thousand foes I need not fear, their malice may deride,
Although against me they unite, and rise on every side.
The armies of the wicked he will spoil, break, and confound,
Smote by his arm, he will disperse and scatter them around;
His blessings on the people rest, and safety will afford,
In him alone salvation is,—it cometh from the Lord.

PSALM IV.

The Lord is merciful; in righteousness
He visits me, he sees my wretchedness;
My people follow vanity and lies;
They wound my honour, and my fame despise;
But the upright, for God himself will choose,
Nor vows sincere, nor humble prayers refuse;
Within your chambers with your hearts commune,
Sin not, be still, nor bring fierce vengeance down;
Offer the sacrifices of the just,

And in his promises securely trust.
Good days will come, then why should we repine,
His face on us, it ceaseth not to shine ;
The corn and wine, and fragrant oils increase,
And fill our hearts with gladness and with peace :
In peace secure I lay me down to rest,
Who put their trust in God shall be forever blest.

PSALM V.

My words, my deeds, remember Lord
And all my secret thoughts record ;
My morning prayer I duly bring,
An offering to my God and King ;
Think ye the wicked please him well ?
With whom no evil thing can dwell,
Can folly in the presence be,
Of him who hateth vanity,
And falsehood, and deceit, and these
Blood-thirsty men who break his laws ?
I in his temple God adore,
And while for mercy I implore,
His righteousness doth me sustain,
Though foes arise, they rise in vain,

Their tongues their vanities confess,
Their whole delight is wickedness,
Their throats like sepulchres appear,
Their words are void of godly fear,
 Against the Lord when such rebel,
Their vain designs he soon will quell:
While they who trust in him rejoice,
And sound his praise with cheerful voice,
To them protection he will yield,
And safely guard, as with a shield.

PSALM VI.

Rebuke me not in anger O my God !
Nor in thine indignation chasten me ;
Heal and have mercy on me—I am weak,
My bones consumed are and melt away.
All night I mourn and groan upon my bed,
My weary couch I water with salt tears,
My beauty is departed and quite gone,
For mercy, O my God ! I fly to thee.

In death no man remembereth the Lord,
To give him thanks out of the silent grave ;

But he at last hath heard my weeping voice,
 And sent me aid, therefore I will rejoice :
 My foes confounded now and put to shame,
 Shall hear and tremble at his mighty name.

PSALM VII.

In the Most High I put my trust, and his protection crave,
 (Lest lions like they eat me up) for he alone can save :
 If I have done that wicked thing the multitude suppose,
 Unto my friends been treacherous, or cruel to my foes,
 Then let them seize my soul upon, if I have been unjust,
 Oh! let them tread me down and lay my honour in the dust ;
 Arise ! O Lord ! and judge between mine enemies and me,
 Then may the people all draw near, the congregation see,
 Our righteous Judge true sentence give, mine innocence proclaim,
 His upright servant justify, the guilty put to shame ;
 Great, but long-suffering is the Lord, though vexed day by day,
 He tries the very heart and reins his mercy to display :
 When man rebels, he takes the sword, his ready bow is bent,
 The instruments of death appear, swift are his arrows sent ;
 And sorrowful will be the lot of such as mischief love,
 The pits which they for others dig will their own ruin prove,
 Their wickedness on their own heads will most assuredly fall ;
 But as to me, I praise the Lord, and daily on him call.

THE PSALMS.

T

PSALM VIII.

In all the kingdoms of the earth, the name of the Most High
Renowned is for excellence, his glory fills the sky :

Strength unto tender babes the Lord ordains,
Who unto him their infant voices raise.
He their just cause against their foes maintains,
And they with joy and gladness sound his praise ;

When I beheld the heavens which he had made,
The moon and stars, works of Almighty mind !
Then what is man ! I in amazement said,
The Son of Man to whom thou art so kind ?

Lower than angels thou didst him create,
With worship and with glory to be crown'd ;
Now all thy works on his dominion wait,
To him all living things are subject found,

Oxen, and sheep, and all of savage kind,
The fowls that walk the earth or wing the air,
His power the fishes of the ocean find,
All that disport and take their pastime there.

In all the kingdoms of the earth, the name of the Most High
Renowned is for excellence, his glory fills the sky.

PSALM IX.

With my whole heart I will give thanks unto the Lord, and raise
My cheerful voice to celebrate his great and marvellous ways ;
My enemies were turned back, or perished in his sight,
The Lord high seated on his throne hath judg'd my cause aright,
Even the wicked to destroy, the foolish to rebuke,
Forever blotted are their names out of his holy book,
They whose delight was war and blood, their glory is gone by,
Like the fair cities they destroy'd, which now in ruins lie.

The Lord his judgment seat prepares, forever to endure,
To judge the earth in righteousness and make his blessings sure,
To succour them that are oppress'd, and their refuge to be,
Thou wilt not those forsake, O Lord ! who put their trust in thee ;
Thy people who in Zion dwell, their joyful voices raise,
Because thou hast regarded them, and sent them quiet days ;
Show mercy too on me, whom thou rais'd from the gates of hell,
That I in Zion may rejoice, and in thy presence dwell.

In their own pits the guilty fall, in their own snares are caught,
They are entrapt in their own nets, and unto judgment brought,
They shall descend into the grave, by the Most High forgot ;
But he will not forget the meek, but bless their humble lot :
When God ariseth in his wrath, and putteth forth his might,
To judge the earth, the heathens quake, and tremble in his sight.

PSALM X.

Although the Lord in our disgrace,
Stands off afar and hides his face,
Yet the oppressors of the poor,
From vengeance shall not rest secure.

The tyrant glories in his shame,
The people tremble at his name,
His countenance his pride displays,
He knows not God in all his ways ;
Saying " I shall not moved be,
Nor ever feel adversity ;"
His mouth is filled with deceit,
His tongue with lies and boastings great ;
For innocence he digs the pit,
And spreadeth nets his prize to get,
He feigns to crouch, and humble stands,
That none may scape his armed hands,
He's like a lion in its den,
That lurking seizeth heedless men :
" Tush !" then he cries, " God will forget,
He hides his face, he sees not it."

Arise, O Lord ! stretch forth thine hand,
And give protection to the land,
Let not the enemy blaspheme,
Saying " the Lord doth careless seem,"

For he will listen to the poor,
And all his promises make sure,
Deliver them out of distress,
And help the weak and fatherless:
The Lord is King for ever, and
From tyranny will cleanse the land.

PSALM XI.

In God alone I put my trust, yet to my soul ye say,
No confidence is placed in thee, therefore unto the mountains flee,
Fly like a bird away ;
For lo! the wicked bend the bow, the arrow on the string,
With ready hands they now prepare, the innocent they will not spare, But to destruction bring ;
God in his holy temple dwells, the heav'ns are his throne,
Thence he beholds the sons of men, he proves and tries their actions, then Rewards the just alone ;
They who in violence delight, and his true judgments hate,
In their own snares are sure to fall, storm, brimstone, fire, will whelm them all, Dreadful will be their fate ;
For God is righteous, and he loves the sons of righteousness ;
Who their integrity still hold, shall his bright countenance behold,
And enter in his ssbil.

PSALM XII.

No righteous men are left, O Lord! on thy protection then
I will rely, no faith is found among the sons of men,
They try each other to deceive, of vanity they talk,
Cease not to flatter with their lips; in crooked paths they walk:
Let them confounded be they spread, their proud reports abroad,
Exalt themselves and vaunting say, "who over us is Lord?"

The deep distress his people feel, the sighings of the poor,
Make God arise with arm stretch'd out, their safety to secure,
His promises are always pure, like silver from the mines,
Which having seven times pass'd the fire, still with fresh lustre shines,

His chosen people he will keep, their generations bless,
Deliver them from tyranny, from sorrow, and distress.

PSALM XIII.

Wilt thou indeed O God! forget for aye,
My cause and turn, thy countenance away,
My soul is vexed and full of misery,
And the ungodly triumph over me;
Consider me e'er I resign my breath,
Before my eyelids sleep the sleep of death,
Before my foes prevail, exalt and cry,
"Rejoice for he is fallen from on high;"

PSALM XV.

Lord, in thy sanctuary who, to dwell wilt thou permit ?

And upon Zion's holy hill in peace and safety sit ?

The man whose life is incorrupt, who has an upright heart,
Whose tongue unused to deceit supports his neighbours part,
He sets not up himself but is, lowly in his own eyes,
When he hath sworn, good faith will keep, and selfishness dispise,
Lends not his wealth on usury, the needy to oppress ;
He who delights in those good deeds, God will preserve, and with abundance bless.

PSALM XVI.

I put my trust O Lord ! in thee,
And to thy protection flee,
Thou art Supreme my Soul declares,
And sets at nought all earthly cares,
With thy Saints delights to dwell,
Who in holiness excel :
But still carefully I shun,
Such as after idols run,
Their drink-offerings of blood,
Their sacrifices I withstood,
I abhor the loathsome food.

}

My lot fell on a fair ground,
A goodly heritage I found,
Guarded by the Lord from ill,
By night, by day, protected still,
Always present in his sight,
He guides my wand'ring steps aright,
Left in hell I shall not be,
My soul shall not corruption see,
He the path to life will show,
Which into his presence go,
At his right hand are joys in store,
And fresh delights for evermore.

PSALM XVII.

Hear me, O Lord! consider my complaint,
And let mine eyes behold thy just decree,
For thou hast visited and proved me.
In the night season when forlorn and faint :
With me there was no iniquity found,
Nor with profaneness did my lips abound ;
From evil deeds, O Lord! direct my way,
And guide my footsteps lest I go astray.
Thou art my Saviour and I trust in thee,
Thy loving kindness all mankind shall see :

Preserved as the apple of thine eye.
Safe underneath the shadow of thy wings,
From the ungodly who in ambush lie,
And compass me about on every side,
They flourish and wax fat, and speak great things,
Men to ensnare, in secret they abide.
Like the young lion greedy of his prey,
Or the old lion lurking in his den,
Save me, O Lord ! from these blood-thirsty men !
Their portion in this world alone have they,
For wealth to them is given, and in their age,
Children to whom they leave their heritage ;
But as for me, if I should in thy presence be,
And favour find, O Lord ! it well contenteth me.

PSALM XVIII.

PART FIRST.

I trust in God, the rock of my defence,
He is my Saviour, buckler and shield,
The horn of my salvation, and will hence
Unto the people his protection yield ;
Sharp are the weapons the ungodly wield,
The sorrows of the grave encompass me,
The very bitterness of death I feel,

The pains of hell my portion seem to be :
For safety, O my God ! I fly to thee :

Earth and the sea, were seen to heave and quake,
Jehovah ! hills removed in his ire,
Mountains from their foundations seem'd to shake,
And from his mouth went a consuming fire ;
The heavens opened at his desire,
And in the midst of darkness he came down ;
His orders then bright Cherubims require,
The lightnings blaze, the thunders dreadful sound,
All waited on him, and his glories crown'd :
He came, he flew, upon the wings of wind,
And his pavilion on darkness spread,
In thickest clouds concealed from mankind,
Fierce storms and tempests gathered round his head ;
But at his presence clouds and darkness fled,
And thunder out of heaven rent the sky,
Hailstones and coals of fire the conflict fed,
Vengeance was poured on the enemy,
And lightnings sent, which made the mighty fly :

The hidden springs of waters then are seen,
And the foundations of the world appear ;

His voice the raging winds of heaven convene,
The high commands, fierce storms and tempests hear ;
His anger fills the universe with fear,
Be merciful, O God ! deliver me,
From mighty foes who deadly hatred bear,
And bring me forth to life and liberty ;
Oh ! may thy chosen people still triumphant be.

CHORUS.

With the clean thou wilt be clean, Holy men love the holy,
With the just the just are seen, Shunning froward vanity :
From the proud thy people save, In the dark thy glories shine,
Thou a host of foes shalt brave, And their strongholds undermine:
Ways of God are undefiled, Tried his words as if by fire,
His commands are just and mild, But an upright heart require.
God himself thy Saviour proves, His right arm hath rais'd thee up,
Whom he chasteneth he loves, Though he taste the bitter cup.

THE KING.

Like harts' feet he makes my feet, Strong my arms for battle feel,
My hands are for war complete, Fit to break a bow of steel.
I my enemies pursue, And before I turn again,
Will their swift destruction view, Trodden underfoot and slain :
Struck with fear their backs they turn, In confusion fall or fly,
In their deep distress they mourn, But none listen to their cry ;
I will tread them in the dust, I will cast them forth as clay,
Israel then in me will trust, Jacob ready homage pay.

Gentiles also when they hear, Nations now to me unknown,
Panic struck and seized with fear, Shall my high pretensions own.

CHORUS.

The Lord liveth and will thee, Now with majesty invest,
He will thy protector be, Sending joy, and peace, and rest ;
Praise aloud his holy name, High he hath exalted thee,
Heathen folk shall hear his fame, And his might and glory see !
He will thee, anointed King, To thy place in peace restore,
With thee joy and gladness bring, And thy sons' sons protect for evermore.

PSALM XIX.

The heavens proclaim the glory of the Lord,
The firmament declares his wondrous works,
The days and nights each other certify,
And speak a language known in every land :

There is the tabernacle of the sun,
He as a bridegroom from his chamber comes,
And, like a giant, joys to run his course,
Forth coming from the utmost of the heavens,
And going to the ends of them again ;
All feel the heat and comfort of his beams :

The laws of the most high, convert the soul,
His testimonies make the simple wise,

The statutes of the Lord rejoice the heart,
And his commands give light unto the eyes,
The fear of him endures for evermore ;
His judgments they are all together true,
More precious than gold, yea, than fine gold,
Sweeter than honey or the honeycomb,
His laws unto his servants wisdom teach,
And to walk by them is a great reward.

Lord ! save me, clear my secret faults away,
For who can tell how oft they disobey ;
Pride shall not have dominion over me,
But undefiled by idolatry,
Pure shall my words and meditations be ;
Well pleasing in my great Redeemer's sight,
Whose goodness fills his people with delight.

PSALM XX.

THE PEOPLE.

May Jehovah aid thy cause,
Hear thy prayer and grant repose,
Send thee help from Zion's hill,
And thy soul with gladness fill ;
May he thy burnt offerings prize,
And accept the sacrifice,

Give thee all good men require,
 And fulfill thy hearts desire ;
 Art not thou the people's choice ?
 In thy safety they rejoice ;
 Cease not on thy God to call,
 He hears thy prayers and grants them all.

THE KING.

Now I am sure, the Lord of hosts will bring,
 Deliverance to his anointed king ;
 They who in chariots and horses trust,
 (While we stand fast) are humbled in the dust,
 For we have put our confidence in thee,
 O Jehovah ! our Saviour to be.

PSALM XXI.

PEOPLE.

The King rejoiceth in the mighty Lord !
 For he hath granted him his heart's desire,
 Given ear unto his prayers, and will afford
 Him all the blessings which his wants require ;
 His loving kindness let mankind admire,
 He placed a crown of gold upon his head,
 Who asking life, long life at his desire,
 Was granted and around him glory spread,
 His enemies subdued, and slain, or captive led.

The God of Jacob sends felicity,
And everlasting joy his King unto ;
Short are the triumphs of the enemy,
For in the midst of them his lightnings go,
To root them out and lay their warriors low,
Their offspring also shall destruction share,
Whilst thou shalt great amongst the nations grow :
The works of God ! his majesty declare,
And songs of triumph, of his glory witness bear.

PSALM XXII.

PART FIRST.

Why hast thou O my God ! forsaken me ?
Standing far off when I cry unto thee :
Whilst I by night or day, find no repose,
The Lord regardeth not, nor favour shows :
Yet all Israel at his altars bow,
And as it was of old, so is it now,
His countenance, he to our fathers gave,
Who put their trust in him their souls to save :
But I'm like reptile vile, in loathsome den.
Abhor'd by Jacob, an outcast of men,
They shake their heads, my state is so forlorn,
They look, deride, and laugh me unto scorn,

Saying "he trusted in his God, we'll see,
If now the Lord, will his preserver be :"

Sure he has been my help, since I was born,
To manhood led me from infancy's morn,
But pain and trouble now, are hard at hand,
Arise Jehovah ! and redeem the land.

Like oxen strong, about me they abide,
Or Basan thy fat bulls, on every side,
Their mouths gape wide as I stand in the way,
Like hungry lions seeking for their prey.

As water poured out, my joints relax,
My bones dissolved, and my heart as wax,
In dust of death, I am cast on the ground,
My dwelling wicked men, and dogs surround ;

With spears they pierce my feet, and either hand,
My bones count as at me they staring stand,
Lots on my vesture cast, my clothes divide,
My Saviour and my God ! be at my side,
From the fierce dog, now let the lamb be born,
The lion's gory fangs, and unicorn's strong horn.

PART SECOND.

My kindred shall glad tidings hear,
The congregation witness bear,
Israel praise his holy name,
And Jacob join in loud acclaim :

While we perform our holy vows,
Jehovah will our cause espouse,
Abundance on the people shower,
And shed his blessings on the poor :

Him all the earth remembering,
Shall worship, and rich offerings bring,
Still his own people he will bless,
For his the whole dominion is :

That they amongst the nations who,
Fat with idol-worship grow,
Their spirits in the dust remain,
No man can raise himself again :

Our children shall Jehovah praise,
Each generation in its days,
Men yet unborn true witness bear,
And still his righteousness declare.

PSALM XXIII.

His tender flock the careful shepherd leads,
Unto cool waters and to verdant meads ;
So doth the mighty shepherd of the soul,
My wants supply, my wanderings controul,
The pleasant paths of righteousness to show
Amongst the shadows in this vale below ;

The walks of death I have in safety trod,
Protected by his staff, and by his rod ;
My table he spread out before the foe,
My head anointed, made my cup o'erflow ;
His tender mercies far, my hopes excel,
Oh may I in his courts, for ever ever dwell.

PSALM XXIV.

On bringing up the Ark from Obed-Edom to Mount Zion.

GRAND CHORUS.

The world is his, Jehovah rules the earth,
And he hath founded it upon the seas,
To his high will the universe owes birth,
Upheld and govern'd by unalterable decrees.

KING DAVID.

His holy hill who shall ascend,
The sanctuary to attend ?

CHORUS.

He who vain things will not endure,
Whose hands are clean, whose heart is pure,
Seeks not his neighbour to deceive,
He that high honour shall achieve,
Him God will with salvation bless,
And reward his righteousness ;

KING DAVID.

Thy sons O Jacob! are the chosen race,
And thy sons, sons they shall behold his face.

GRAND CHORUS.

Lift up your heads ye gates, ye everlasting doors
Be lifted up—the King of Glory will come in :

CHORUS.

Who is that King?—

GRAND CHORUS.

Throughout all ages he endures,
It is the Lord of Hosts, who comes these gates within :
Lift up your heads ye gates, ye everlasting doors
Be lifted up—the King of Glory will come in.

PSALM XXV.

I unto God my thoughts lift up, my trust is in his name
And I shall not confounded be, In presence of the enemy,
Turn'd back and put to shame ;
Destruction on the guilty waits, Oh! shew me the right way,
Forgive the errors of my youth, Instruct me in the paths of truth,
And teach me to obey ;
Call to remembrance O Lord! thy tender mercies all,
And to all nations now make known, The loving kindness thou hast shewn, To them who on thee call ;

Gracious and righteous is our God, mankind his judgments see,
 His counsels grave, the humble guide, With him the lowly shall abide, And have prosperity ;
 His ways are ways of pleasantness, I will his favour seek,
 May he to me forgiveness shew, For grievous are my sins I know,
 And own with anguish deep ;
 That man alone who fears the Lord, true wisdom can discern,
 His offspring will possess the land, Their souls rejoice in plenty,
 and His secret counsels learn ;
 Mine eyes look up to thee O Lord ! from sin to set me free,
 Thy face to me in mercy turn, I now for my transgressions mourn,
 In grief and misery ;
 Quite desolate, Oh ! save me from the sorrows of the heart,
 Remember that the enemy, Still tyrannizeth over me,
 Acting a treacherous part ;
 Now righteousness and perfectness shall all my thoughts employ,
 And still I trust to live to see, That Israel will deliver'd be,
 From trouble to great joy.

 PSALM XXVI.

I trust in God to judge my cause,
 For my integrity he knows ;
 My faith in him will still abide,
 Nor from his service ever slide,

His judgments are before mine eyes,
My very heart and reins he tries.
Before him I delight to walk,
I heed not vain dissemblers' talk,
With wicked men I will not sit,
But from their evil counsels get,
My hands wash in innocency,
O Lord ! and to thy altar flee,
There in thanksgiving raise my voice,
And in thy righteousness rejoice,
Within thy courts I love to dwell,
In truth and honour they excel,
O shut not out thy servant then,
With sinners and blood-thirsty men,
Though gifts and treasures they possess,
Their souls delight in wickedness,
From them O Lord ! deliver me,
That I may live innocently,
Before the congregation stand,
And glorify thee in the land.

PSALM XXVII.

The Lord is my strength, my salvation, and light,
Then what should I fear, or of whom be afraid ;

The wicked take counsel to slay me outright,
But stumble and fall, for he sendeth me aid,
Confounding their hosts though for battle array'd :

One thing is my wish, in the temple to be,
All the days of my life, and its splendour behold,
There safely repose in the sanctuary,
Where greatness and beauty their glories unfold,
It is my best safeguard, it is my stronghold,

The rock upon which I am raised on high,
My sacrifices, I there offer with joy,
And worship in the face of the enemy ;
Myself in thanksgiving and prayer I employ,
For help lest the wicked my people destroy :

Seek the Lord, O ye people ! his face I will seek,
O turn not in anger thy presence from me,
Forsake me not Lord, for indeed I am weak,
Nor father, nor mother, my helpers can be,
The Lord is my refuge, unto him I flee,

To save me and show me the ways of the just,
For foes are at hand, and false witnesses rise,
But in his salvation I put my whole trust,
I call on his name, and he heareth my cries :
O ye people ! await on the Lord and be wise.

PSALM XXVIII.

I trust in the Lord, not to leave me to scorn,
Though I am in trouble oppress'd and forlorn ;
I will not his laws and ordinances quit,
Lest I be as they who go down to the pit :

In his holy temple is my safe retreat,
There I hold up my hands before the mercy seat;
And with the ungodly I will take no part,
For they to deceive practice every vile art ;

They in their own imaginations proceed,
And walk in the paths which to destruction lead,
Such is their reward who true wisdom despise,
And follow what seemeth best in their own eyes :

As for me, to Jehovah glad homage I yield,
He is my salvation, my sword, and my shield,
I am his anointed, and whilst I employ,
My heart in his service, it danceth with joy :

Israel he will to prosperity lead,
And give out abundance to them and their seed,
Whom he hath established for evermore,
Praise him O ye people ! his goodness adore.

PSALM XXIX.

Your sacrifices to Jehovah bring,
Young rams upon his holy altar slay,

Worship ascribe to the celestial King,
And let all eyes his wondrous works survey :
The world of waters his commands obey,
He makes the thunder, and his mighty voice,
Doth rule the ocean, and its fury stay :
His word is heard, and all the lands rejoice,
His voice is glorious—it is a glorious voice.

It breaketh down the lofty cedar trees,
The cedar trees of thee, O Lebanon !
And Libanus, man with amazement sees
Bound like a hind or a young unicorn,
So bounds also, so quakes mount Sirion ;
God rends the wilderness of Cades,
Above the floods, on flames of fire is born,
The thunder of his voice divides the trees,
Huge oaks like bushes bend to his decrees.

Your sacrifices to Jehovah bring,
*He is the Lord, the everlasting King,
He for his chosen people hath in store,
Peace and prosperity for ever, evermore.

PSALM XXX.

O praise the Lord ! the Lord of Hosts
Confounds my foes, their taunts, their boasts :

My life he hath preserved it,
While they descend into the pit.

Ye holy Saints his praises sing
His greatness to remembrance bring ;
But for a twinkling of the eye,
His wrath endures and passeth by ;
Dreams in the night may cause dismay,
But joy returneth with the day.

Prosperity and a life long,
I cried are mine, my rock is strong,
But when the Lord conceal'd his face,
Then trouble came and dire disgrace.

Unto him in my misery,
I gat me straight, and right humbly,
Lest in the dust I should be laid,
And vows sincere in vain be paid.

Now joy and gladness smooth my way,
Sackcloth and tears aside I lay,
The righteous thank the Lord therefore,
And praise his name for evermore.

PSALM XXXI.

I trust in God, the Lord of righteousness,
To save me from the malice of my foes ;

He will my wrongs and grievances redress,
He is my rock, my castle of repose ;
My life is in his hands, secure from those,
Who snares for me in secret places spread,
Because their tyranny I still oppose ;
By his strong arm I am in safety led,
He set my feet at large, he raised up my head :

 Show mercy O my God ! remember me,
In my affliction, grief, and misery :
My eyes consumed are, with heaviness,
My days are waxed old, with feebleness
The sinews of my strength are in decay,
My beauty faded is and pass'd away,
My friends and my companions from me flee,
I'm persecuted by the enemy,
Like vessel frail, in pieces shivered,
I'm valueless, forgot, and as one dead ;

 Yet do the people rage, and fill'd with strife,
Against the Lord blaspheme, and seek to take my life ;
But he I know, my Saviour will prove,
My life is in his hand who rules above,
He the light of his countenance will show,
And the ungodly shall his judgments know.

 The bounty of the Lord in streams will flow,
On those who fear him and adore his name.

Blessings on them he freely will bestow,
Who in his house continue free from blame,
And in his city are not put to shame ;
I also have found favour in the eyes,
Of him my God, to whom I humbly came,
He loves the meek who vanities despise ;
Let all his saints, to praise his holy name arise !

PSALM XXXII.

How blessed is the man ! whose righteousness
Accepted is, and whose sins are forgiven,
He calleth on the Lord in his distress,
And rests his hopes, and puts his trust in heaven ;
And heaven approving on that man will smile,
Whose heart is pure, and whose tongue knows no guile :

In trouble though I ceased to complain,
Yet my transgressions heavy on me lay,
Sore griev'd, I turned to the Lord again
In prayer, and sought forgiveness day by day ;
I seek his favour in the days of peace,
E'er tumults rise, and raging foes increase :

For safe deliverance glad songs arise,
From those who worship God with willing mind,

But they shall toil who his commands despise,
Like horse and mule which men with fetters bind :
Be glad then, O ye righteous ! and rejoice,
Sing praises to Jehovah, with a joyful voice.

PSALM XXXIII.

Sing praises to the Lord, ye righteous,
For to be joyful well beseemeth you,
Take up the lute, and stringed harp, and thus
Proclaim aloud to him all honour due,
Whose goodness fills the earth, whose word is always true.

He spoke, and heaven and all its host were made,
He piled up the waters in a heap,
Earth trembled, and the nations were afraid,
When they beheld the wonders of the deep ;
O serve the Lord with fear, and his commandments keep.

The people and the princes of strange lands,
Consult together and vain schemes devise,
But God their machinations vile withstands,
His chosen people (will their power despise)
Whose generations still find favour in his eyes.

From heaven, Jehovah looked down to view,
The dwellers on the earth, whom he had made,
Whose understandings, and whose hearts he knew,

He saw their kings and princes were afraid,
Though hosts of men and horses gather'd to their aid.
His eyes beheld the faithful and the just,
To save their souls from sin and misery,
And be a shield to all who in him trust;
They shall rejoice, they shall salvation see,
Who place O Lord! their hope and confidence in thee.

PSALM XXXIV.

Thanks unto Jehovah bring,
All my boasts of him shall be,
And when I his praises sing,
The people they rejoice with me,
Together we will praise his name,
Who to our assistance came:
When on him the humble cry,
Safety is their sure reward,
And relief in misery,
Angels will their dwellings guard,
Trusting him the poor shall see
Good days, and know felicity:
Saints who serve the Lord with fear,
They abound in all things good,
Easy burthens too they bear,
While the lions roar for food:

Children hearken to my speech,
To you I will his judgments teach :
If you wish to see good days,
Keep your lips from slanders vile,
Would you walk in quiet ways,
Let your tongues be free from guile,
Fly sin and cease not good to do,
And still the paths of peace pursue :

Blessed are the meek, behold !
To their prayers the Lord gives ear,
But to the ungodly, cold
His countenance is, and severe ;
Hearts contrite doth not despise,
But listens to his servants' cries.

Troubles may afflict the good,
But relief is near at hand ;
Wicked men unless withstood,
Soon would desolate the land ;
Humbly for salvation crave,
And the Lord your souls will save.

PSALM XXXV.

The Lord will fight the fight, and in my cause,
His hand upon the sword and buckler lay,

His shining spear will put to flight my foes,
Confound their counsels, and their fury stay ;
The guilty bands who haste ashame'd away,
And scatt' red are like dust before the wind,
To the destroying angel fall a prey ;
Dire vengeance urging on their steps behind,
In pits prepar'd for others they perdition find :

Still in Jehovah will my soul rejoice,
He from the haughty tyrant guards the weak,
And from false witnesses who raise the voice,
Revilings bring, and my destruction seek ;
But his strong arm protects the humble and the meek :

Evil for good those bitter foes return,
To vex my soul, though in their misery,
When sick to death : I ceased not to mourn,
I put on sackcloth, and walk'd heavily,
As one lamenting for his mother grievously :

But now that I am in adversity,
They gather'd are together with great joy,
With mouths they mock at my calamity,
They cry " fie on thee," and my peace destroy,
And to deceive me, spies and flatterers employ :

But God will fight the fight, and judge my cause,
Lest I to cruel men subjected be,

He will confound and put shame my foes,
The wicked shall not triumph over me,
Who clothe themselves in their hypocrisy :
The righteous shall see it and rejoice,
They will rejoice at my prosperity ;
To serve the Lord with gladness is my choice,
I will sing praises to him, with a joyful voice.

PSALM XXXVI.

The iniquity of vain man behold !
The fear of God is not before his eyes,
In his hypocrisy he waxeth bold,
And in his own imagination wise,
Such men the pleasant ways of righteousness despise :
To heaven the glories of the Lord extend,
His promises firm as the mountains stand,
His mercies on mankind as dews descend,
Lo ! the great deep awaiteth his command,
Like unto streams of waters in a fruitful land :
His arm protecteth all created things ;
Who put their trust in him among mankind,
Under the awful shadow of his wings,
Plenty, the well of life, and safety find,
And drink (as out of pleasant rivers) joys refin'd :

Lord ! let thy mercies with the just abide,
Show kindness unto them whose hearts are true,
Oh ! save thy servant from the foot of pride,
And from the power of those who him pursue,
Ungodly men to whom vengeance and wrath are due.

PSALM XXXVII.

Envy not the workers in iniquity,
(They'll be cut down and wither, like grass or green tree)
But trust in Jehovah, obey his command,
And thou shalt be sav'd and inherit the land :

Thou shalt be seen walking in the righteous way,
As spotless and bright as the sun at noon-day ;
Well pleased, content, and all wrath laid aside,
With the godly, nor anger, nor malice abide,
The wicked continue not ; in a short space,
In vain may be looked for, their dwelling place ;
But the humble shall prosper and dwellings possess,
They will be established in righteousness :

The wicked—Jehovah regardeth with scorn,
Although they take counsel, exalting their horn,
The sword they have drawn, and the bow they have bent,
To slay the defenceless is their base intent :

But God will deliver his saints from their yoke,
By the sword they shall fall, and their bow shall be br
As fat of lambs which for burnt-offerings lay,
They shall be consum'd, and like smoke pass away.

PART SECOND.

I now am old, I young have been,
Yet in my day I have not seen,
That good men unprotected were,
Or their children in despair ;
For in the Lord is their delight.
And they find favour in his sight,
Maintained by his helping hand,
They prosper and enjoy the land.
For he protects them on their way,
From those who lie in wait to slay,
And they shall not destroyed be,
Who put their trust, O Lord in thee !
The wicked I myself have seen,
Flourishing like the bay-tree green,
But when again I passed by,
His dwelling-place none might descry ;
His habitation knew no one,
I looked and he was clean gone ;
Transgressors thus he casteth out,
And their descendents take no root ;

But men find comfort at the last,
Whose lives in innocence are past,
And they shall not forsaken be,
Who put their trust, O Lord in thee !

PSALM XXXVIII.

Rebuke me not in indignation, O Lord !
Oh thy hand ! lieth heavy on me,
Thine arrows are sharp as a two-edged sword :
My crimes and transgressions keen anguish afford,
And I feel for my iniquity :

My sins are now visited on my own head,
A sore burthen and heavy to bear,
My wounds are corrupted, diseases are spread,
All over my body their poison they shed,
And my days are quite full of despair :

My heart and strength fail me, I'm cover'd with sloth,
And the light of my eyes waxeth dim,
My neighbours despise me and stand afar off,
My foe lays snares for me and makes me his scoff,
While abash'd I cannot answer him :

The Lord looketh down and knows what I desire,
For in him I have placed my whole trust,

Well pleased he grants me the boon I require,
That the foe may not over me triumph acquire,
And my honour be laid in the dust.

Yet they are now flourishing many and strong,
Who for good, return evil to me;
But God rules the earth, to him judgments belong,
He guardeth the weak, that they suffer no wrong,
Even I shall his salvation see.

PSALM XXXIX.

I said—I will take heed unto my ways,
For Oh! my lot is fallen on evil days;
While the ungodly watch on every side,
My tongue as with a bridle I will guide;
But it was pain and grief in silence to abide:

At length my heart wax'd hot, my soul took fire,
My tongue gave utterances to my desire,
I even then did of the Lord require,
The number of my wretched days to give,
That I might know how long in pain I had to live:

Compared with the Creator, what is man?
His life is vanity, its length a span,
He walketh after shadows, and in pain,
Vain—he disquieteth himself—in vain
He ploughs, he sows, and knows not who shall reap the grain

Then where's my hope, O God ! it is in thee ;
For my transgressions, he visiteth me,
Upon my head his hand lies heavily ;
He chastens men for sin, and they decay,
He makes their beauty wither and consume away ;
Oh ! spare me yet, though guilty I have been,
E'er I go hence and be no longer seen,
I am a stranger and sojourner here,
Such as I am, such all our fathers were,
Lord ! save thy people, and their supplications hear.

PSALM XL.

I sought the Lord, I waited patiently :
The mighty Lord hath listened to my cry,
Delivered me from the loathsome pit,
That I might in his sanctuary sit,
He shewed me his rock, and set my feet on it.

His judgments are in mercy and in truth ;
He put a song of triumph in my mouth ;
The man, O Lord ! who puts his trust in thee,
Shall be at peace and have prosperity,
Walking uprightly, he thy majesty shall see :

Burnt offerings for sin and sacrifice,
Are not acceptable found in thine eyes,

Then lo I come, as written in the book,
To do thy will, delight I always took ;
Let all mankind give ear who for salvation look :

Oh ! let the comforter with me be found,
For troubles thick my dwelling-place surround,
As many as the hairs upon my head,
Are my transgressions, were they numbered;
My spirit faileth, and my soul is troubled :

But now the Lord will help, he hears my cry,
And covereth with shame the enemy ;
He cares for me, I will his praises sing,
He is my hope, Redeemer, and my King :
Rejoice ye chosen people, and glad homage bring.

PSALM XLI.

Blessed among mankind is he,
Who comforteth the poor in their distress,
The land rejoiceth in his righteousness ;
That man shall live at peace, and in prosperity :

His enemies shall not prevail ;
When sorrow and disease weigh down his head,
The Lord will send relief and smooth his bed,
And to protect his chosen servant will not fail :

To me O God ! forgiveness show,
If I have sinned, it is against thee ;

Then why exult my foes and vauntingly,
Conspire against me, and transgress thy holy law :

It was my own familiar friend,
He had my confidence, he eat my bread,
That laid wait for me, for my life waited,
But he will fall, and all who him assistance lend :
Upon my God ! I now depend,
He sendeth health, gives me prosperity,
And strength to walk before him uprightly,
His holy name shall be blessed, world without end.

PSALM XLII.

The panting hart, delights cool streams to ford,
E'en so my wounded spirit flies to thee ;
Thirsts for the living waters of the Lord !
And in his presence, in his courts to be ;
My tears have been my food, tears that afford,
My only solace in my misery,
“ And where is now thy God ? ” taunting they say,
Yet I will praise his name upon his holy day :

Then why so full of heaviness my soul ?
Why art thou thus disquieted in me ?
My trust is in my God, he will controul
My foes ; and send by day prosperity,

And guard me in the night from treason foul,
Delivering me from death and misery,
When the vext deep his high command performs,
And overwhelms me with its waves, and all its storms :

My soul is in dismay and full of woe,
Disquieted within me day by day ;
In heaviness, with feeble steps and slow.
Pursu'd by enemies I take my way,
I'm smitten and oppressed by the foe ;
“ And where is now thy God ?” they vaunting say ;
Still the light of his countenance I see,
He will not leave his servant in adversity.

PSALM XLIII.

The God of Israel will judge my cause,
And from deceitful men protect me still,
Learn me to walk according to his laws,
And guide me to his house and holy hill,
With joy and gladness there my rapt soul fill,
While with the golden harp, sweet voices sound,
I will rejoice with them to do his will,
Nor longer tread with heavy steps the ground,
But glory in my God, whose favour I have found.

PSALM XLIV.

The men of Israel, O Lord ! have heard
What thou hast done for them in days of old,
Our fathers thy great goodness have declared,
They who did all thy wondrous works behold :

Thou drove the heathen back with a strong hand,
Yea, with a mighty arm, them rooted out,
And planted thine own people in the land,
Whilst all the nations trembled round about :

This was achieved by our God, our King,
And not by sword, nor bow, nor mortal arm,
Rejoice O Jacob ! and then praises sing,
Of him who guarded you from deadly harm ;
The favour of his countenance divine ye knew,
He fought your battles, and your foes he overthrew.

But now alas ! he standeth off afar,
Abashed before the enemy we fly,
He leadeth not our armies now to war,
Nor heeds our sufferings, nor regards our cry ;

Derided by mankind, and laugh'd to scorn,
We are a bye-word grown for misery,
Men shake their heads at our estate forlorn,
Subdued and pining in adversity ;

We are as sheep appointed to be slain,
Or droves of oxen seized on for prey,

Smote by his hand all human help is vain,
Dispersed now in heathen lands we stray ;
In dens obscene we lie, and draw infectious breath,
O'ershadowed with woe, and danger, and with death.

Such is our fallen state and evil lot,
Abandoned to shame, disgrace and woe,
Yet we the Lord our God have not forgot,
His holy covenant is still our law ;

If we have ceased on his name to call,
Or hands in private to strange gods lifted,
Upon us let his indignation fall ;
From whom no secrets of our hearts are hid ;

Why tarrieth the Lord, will he not turn
His face unto us in our misery,
Will he his chosen people leave to mourn?
In bonds forever and captivity ;
He will show mercy yet, to them who in him trust,
Even to us, although now humbled in the dust.

PSALM XLV.

My heart's inditing great and glorious things,
My tongue proclaimeth thee, the King of kings,
Beyond the sons of men, fair is thy face,
Thy lips are full of loveliness and grace ;
And thou art blessed of the Lord, and all thy race,

Thou in renown art great, in honour high,
Go gird thee with thy sword upon thy thigh,
Though thou art meek, ride on in righteousness,
The heathen thy dominion confess,
Thine arrows sharp and swift, will now thy wrongs redress.

The Lord for ever hath ordain'd thy seat,
To rule with a right sceptre, nations great,
Upright thou art, free from iniquity,
Wherefore the Lord thy God anointed thee,
In honour higher than thy fellows far to be :

Perfumes of myrrh, aloes, and cassia,
Ivory and gold ; thy palaces display ;
Princesses in thy courts and presence stand
In golden robes ; the queen at thy right hand,
Sitteth array'd and crown'd, and gladdens all the land :

Hearken ! thou daughter of a monarch, hear,
Unto the voice of wisdom, lend thine ear ;
Grieve not for friends, thy father's house forget,
Happy upon thy throne in splendour sit,
For thy great lord and consort a companion fit :

Thy beauty giveth pleasure to the king,
The wealthy of the land rich offerings bring,
Loaded with gifts the virgins in thy train,
In vestments white attir'd, with thee remain ;
Embroid'ry and wrought gold from Tyre, adorn thy reign :

Greatest amongst the queens thou wilt appear,
And have instead of parents, children dear,
To be made kings and princes in all lands;
The Lord of Hosts is mighty, at his hands
We have found favour; glorious are his commands.

PSALM XLVI.

The Lord God of Jacob is our sure refuge,
At his wonders, alarmed we need not to be,
Though the ocean should swell and the dry land deluge,
Or the mountains be rent and cast into the sea:

The Lord is amongst us, we prosperous grow,
Near the sanctuary of him the most high,
The streams of the rivers they cease not to flow,
In the city of God, they his people supply;

Jehovah is with us, our refuge and stay,
The heathen may rage, and the kingdoms rebel,
At the sound of his voice they are melted away,
O'erwhelmed in ruin, his triumphs they swell:

That he is supreme, kings and their princes know,
He maketh all over the earth wars to cease,
He breaketh asunder, the spear and the bow,
He burneth the chariots, and sendeth us peace:

In his presence be still, he ruleth alone,
In heaven above, and in the earth below.

And unto his people he favour hath shown,
And is their safe refuge, the heathen shall know.

PSALM KLVII.

Rejoice ye sons of Jacob, clap your hands,
Raise to your God the voice of melody,
His fame is gone abroad unto all lands,
There is no other god but the Most High,
Who rules the earth, the ocean, and the sky ;
He quells the heathen and subdues their rage,
And makes their fruitful fields your heritage :

Jehovah comes, the joyful trumpets sound,
His chosen people loud hosannas sing,
The nations quake and tremble all around,
And join his servants, and glad homage bring
Unto Jehovah, universal King ;
And unto Israel dominion yield,
Whom he protects and guards as with a mighty shield.

PSALM XLVIII.

Great is the Lord and highly to be praised,
Upon Mount Zion in his holiness ;
There his own city is in splendour raised,
With joy and gladness all the earth to bless ;

Great is the city of the mighty King,
In vain the rulers there, their armies bring,
Within its battlements and ramparts huge,
The sanctuary is our safe refuge :

They get themselves together in array
Against Jerusalem, her towers behold,
Her bulwarks fill the princes with dismay,
In haste pass on the valiant and the bold,
Seized with fear, of all their honours shorn,
They're weak as mothers, or as babes new born ;
Struck by the Lord, their ships too, ruin find,
O'erwhelmed with storms, and by a strong east wind :

For like as we have heard, so have we seen,
The holy temple of the Lord of Hosts,
Hath by that mighty arm protected been,
Which guards our city, and which guards our coasts :

Count Zion's lofty towers, her walls survey,
Judah's fair daughter ! lovely in her day,
Her bulwarks mark, her palaces behold,
In beauty perfect, and bedeck'd with gold,
And there abides the everlasting King,
Rejoice O Jacob ! loud hosannas sing.

PSALM XLIX.

Give ear ye people ! hearken all mankind,
Both rich and poor, the humble and the high,
If ye the paths of wisdom wish to find,
Now hear her voice, and listen to her cry ;
I will not be afraid in these bad days,
Although the wicked compass all my ways :

To understanding my whole heart inclines,
Dark sayings, parables, and proverbs hid,
Or mysteries upon the harp divines,
And words obscure, by wise men uttered ;
But they who void of understanding are,
To beasts that perish only may compare :

When they grow great, ye need not grieved be,
Although they call the land by their own name,
Their house increasing in prosperity,
And all the earth resounding with their fame ;
They think that generations yet unborn,
Will keep their sayings, and their name adorn :

They trust in riches which will nought avail,
Their brother's souls or their own souls to save,
Can gold or silver over death prevail,
Or serve them for a ransom from the grave :
In honour folly's sons continue not,
They perish and are utterly forgot

And over them the righteous will claim
Dominion at last, yet in their day,
They were renowned, ye shall be the same,
For lo! the God of Jacob is your stay ;
You put your trust in him your souls to save,
And shall not see corruption in the grave.

PSALM L.

The Lord hath spoken with a mighty voice,
And gathered together all mankind,
The heavens that are above, the earth below,
His high commandments hear and judgments know :
His countenance perfect in beauty shin'd
Upon Mount Zion : let his saints rejoice,
They heard his voice—it was a glorious voice :
At his approach the pealing thunders sound,
Tempests and storms encompass him around,
And a consuming fire devours the ground ;
Bow down yourselves before his throne with fear,
For lo! it is Jehovah's voice, give ear !

Jacob—burnt-offerings and sacrifice
The bullocks and he-goats within thy fold,
Thy flour of wheat, thy turtle-doves withhold,
They are not now well-pleasing in mine eyes ;

If I be hungry, I will not tell thee,
The world and all therein belongs to me,
Beasts of the forest and the field are mine,
The feather'd race which the high region fills,
The cattle feeding on a thousand hills,
And fish which in the waters sport and shine ;
Yet think ye? I take pleasure in your food,
To eat the flesh of bulls, to drink goats' blood.

With offerings of thanks and praise draw nigh,
And hearts contrite, and God will hear your cry,
Cease not therefore to pay your vows to the Most High,
Though with false lips the wicked honour me,
They cast the laws behind them and pass on,
Deceit they practice and idolatry,
And seek to slander their own mother's son,
Yea, their own brethern they accuse falsely,
And plunge in vice and to destruction run ;
Because to punish them the Lord forbears,
Their hearts they harden, and they shut their ears,
Forget there is none other god but he,
To save their souls from death and misery.

PSALM LI.

THE KING.

According to thy goodness, O my God !
Extend thy tender mercies unto me ;
My iniquity I confess, my faults
Are manifold and still before mine eyes ;
Shapen in wickedness, and born in sin,
My mother full of sorrow nurtur'd me,
Against thee I have sinned and done wrong,
And thou art justified in all thy ways.

CHORUS.

Behold the Lord requires an upright heart,
And that the understanding should be pure :
He gave thee hyssop, therefore art thou clean,
Yea, purified, and as white as snow,
Hear thou the voice of gladness and of joy,
That the bones which were broken may rejoice.

THE KING.

Turn not O Lord ! from me thy countenance,
But a right spirit within me renew,
Out from thy presence cast me not away,
Nor take sweet consolation from my soul,
Deliver me from guilt, the guilt of blood,
Thou art my God, my life is in thy hand.

CHORUS.

Thy mouth shall sing the praises of the Lord,
Thy tongue his righteousness and truth proclaim,
For sacrifices he requireth not,
And in burnt-offerings takes no delight,
A troubled spirit is his sacrifice,
He is best pleased with a contrite heart;
He loves his chosen people, and will build,
The walls of Zion and Jerusalem,
Their oblations to him, they then may bring,
And oxen on his holy altar slay.

PSALM LII.

Thou glories, O thou tyrant! in thy shame,
(But the Lord sends me help from day to day)
Thy words the baseness of thy soul proclaim,
They cut like razors and are sharp as they,
Thou spreadest lies abroad, the old and young
Have heard thy calumnies, O thou false tongue;
For this, for ever God will punish thee,
From the land of the living pluck thee out,
His chosen people shall rejoice, and see
Thee wither and thy offspring take no root;

But as for me, I trust O Lord ! in thee,
And my delight is in thy courts to be,
To grow and flourish there, like the green olive-tree

PSALM LIII.

The foolish live as if there were no God ;
And void of understanding in their day,
The paths of folly and of vice have trod,
For utterly corrupt and vile are they :

Jehovah looked down from heaven upon
The children of mankind, that he might know
If any sought his name—there was not one
Observed his ordinances and his law ;
They love not God—they fear (where no fear is),
Pretend, in order to oppress the poor ;
Although it is the Lord that hath done this
To us : yet they our heritage devour :

With our God only dwelleth salvation !
Oh ! save thy people from captivity,
That Israel may praise thee in Zion,
And all the sons of Jacob joyful be.

THE PSALMS.

59

PSALM LIV.

Show mercy O my God ! now hear my prayer,
Arise, protect me and avenge my cause,
Their bonds the tyrants of the earth prepare,
And strangers in the land my truth oppose,
The Lord they know not, nor regard his laws :
But I will trust in him and rest secure,
He will deliver me from all my foes :
With open heart, and with thanksgivings pure,
I praise his name, whose mercies evermore endure.

PSALM LV.

Vouchsafe O Jehovah ! to hear my cry,
My spirit is agrieved and I mourn,
My heart too falleth and is sore afraid ;
Pursued and smitten by my foes I fly,
On mischief they are bent, with fury burn,
Danger and death my dwelling-place invade,
I tremble, and am dumb, and utterly dismay'd :

I wish that I had wings, wings like a dove,
Then would I fly away and be at rest ;
Leaving this people for the wilderness,
The desert should my sanctuary prove,
With safety and with innocence blest,

The wicked there would not my-soul oppress,
Nor strife within the city's walls demand redress :

In order to exalt himself, he who
With foul dishonour sought to cover me,
Was not an open foe who scorn'd deceit,
For then I could have born the deadly blow ;
Mine own familiar friend, 'twas even he !
We in the house of God were wont to meet,
Enjoying confidence, and daily converse sweet :

He spoiled such as trusted in his words,
His covenant forgot, broke his own law,
And was deceitful found in all his ways ;
His sayings smooth as oil, are sharp as swords,
His thoughts with guile and malice overflow ;
Woe unto him, his heart the just betrays,
He will not have prosperity, nor see good days :

But as to me, I on Jehovah call,
At evening, at morning, and noon-day,
He is the rock whereon I place my trust,
There no misfortunes can on me befall,
I need not fear the foe, nor feel dismay :
The wicked man, he humbles in the dust,
But raiseth up the righteous, and exalts the just.

PSALM LVI.

Unless the Lord my God deliver me,
Swallowed up will all my honours be,
Lost and forgotten quite ;
For I am harass'd by the enemy,
And mighty men against my peace unite,
In secret counsel and in open fight :

But whilst I put my trust in the Most High,
I need not be afraid, I need not fly,
He will my cause maintain ;
My tears are numbered, he hears my cry,
When I against false witnesses complain,
Who to ensnare me rise, but rise in vain :

I in thy promises, O Lord rejoice,
To dwell within thy courts hath been my choice,
There offer up my vow,
And sing thy praises with a cheerful voice ;
My feet from falling thou preventest now,
Lays balm to my vext soul, and smooths my brow.

PSALM LVII.

Show mercy O Jehovah ! unto me,
Before thy throne, for help myself I cast,

Within thy house, in thy sanctuary,
And underneath the shadow of thy wings,
Save me from powerful foes, princes, and kings,
Until this tyranny be overpast ;
Like lions seeking whom they may devour,
They prowl abroad, O ! save me from their power,
Their fury bursteth forth like flames of fire,
Their teeth are spears and arrows, and their words
Are full of venom, and as sharp as swords,
They wound my honour, they my life require,
They laid snares for me, they digged a pit,
But lo ! themselves have fallen into it :

My heart is fixed and turned unto thee ;
Exalt thyself O Lord ! above the heavens,
The splendour of thy glory fills the earth ;
Awake, up lute and harp, I will awake
Myself right early, and my voice employ,
To praise thy name with gladness and great joy,
Amongst the people for thy mercy's sake,
Whose arm hath brought salvation unto me :
Exalt thyself O Lord ! above the heavens,
The splendour of thy glory fills the earth.

PSALM LVIII.

Is wisdom in the congregation found,
Or righteousness among the sons of men?
Alas! their hearts in vanity abound,
Iniquity finds favour in their eyes,
For froward from their mother's womb are they,
As soon as they are born they go astray,
Their breath's infectious as serpent's den,
Or adder deaf, that shutteth up her ears,
And stoppeth not to listen to the cries
Of charmers, charm they never so wisely,
Yet the ungodly shall subdued be,
Though fierce as lions seeking for their prey,
They shall be smitten, and consume away
Like snail obscene, or water wasted all,
Or fruit which rotteth in untimely years,
Destruction on their guilty heads shall fall,
As brief as in the flame of crackling thorn,
They will be lost, deserted, and forlorn :
The just rewarded then, will gladly see
There is a God by whom the earth will judged be.

PSALM LIX.

Jehovah high and mighty Lord of Hosts,
Deliver me from the blood-thirsty foe,

They gather them together in array,
And in the city wander too and fro,
They're full of vanity and empty boasts,
They are like hungry wolves in quest of prey,
Deceit is on their lips and in their words,
They are as dangerous as two-edged swords :

But now behold, the Lord he standeth up,
He sees and visiteth the heathen all,
They must his wrath endure and taste the cup
Of bitterness ; by Jacob laugh'd to scorn ;
Destruction on their guilty heads will fall,
And they shall perish and consume away ;
For judgment is the Lords let mankind know,
At his command they flourish or decay ;
To praise him I will rise at early morn,
And to the people all his goodness show,
It reaches unto heaven, and fills the world below.

PSALM LX.

When Israel transgress'd the Lord's command,
They were cast out and sattered abroad,
Divided then and shaken was the land,
The cup was full, they drank the deadly wine ;
Yet favour to the just Jehovah showed,

His face upon them ceased not to shine,
And he delivered them with a strong hand ;
Now God hath spoken, I have heard his voice !
“ Sechem I will rule over ; and divide
The pleasant valley of Samaria ;
I am exalted—Israel rejoice !
Gilead is mine—Manassah too is mine,
The men of Judah my commands obey,
In peace my head on Ephraim I recline,
Philistia rejoiceth on my side ;
Edom and Mo’b which were of old so great,
The latches of our shoes shall loose to wash our feet :”
Who unto the strong city led our armies, who ?
Even to Edom, was it not the Lord ? for he
Hath fought the battle, and subdued the foe ;
And under him we have done valiantly ;
Vain is the arm of man, his strength’s but vanity.

PSALM LXL

Give ear O Lord ! and listen to my cry,
For now in misery and deep distress,
I call upon thee from the wilderness ;
Unto thy rock for safety let me fly,

There underneath the shadow of thy wings,
For ever in thy sanctuary be,
Who granted life, yea, long life unto kings,
And heritance to them who trust in thee ;
I will perform my vows from day to day,
Nor cease to worship and glad homage pay..

PSALM LXII.

My spirit waiteth on Jehovah high,
The King of kings who reigneth over all;
He is my rock and castle of defence,
I put my trust in him and shall not fall:
Encompassed by enemies, I fly,
For they delight in wrongs and violence,
Though soft their words, their hearts are full of gall,
The sayings of their tongues foul deeds belie ;
But feeble they shall be and waste away,
Like walls broke down or fences in decay. Selah !

My spirit waiteth on Jehovah high,
He sends salvation to his people all,
And is indeed their castle of defence,
Who put their trust in him shall never fall.
Then turn unto him, O ye people ! turn,
From evil ways and deeds of violence ;

Trust not vain man, nor on his strength rely,
Though wealth increase, let not your hearts rejoice,
But rather for your iniquities mourn,
For God hath spoken, ye have heard his voice,
Although long-suffering, yet just is he,
According to his works man shall rewarded be. Selah!

PSALM LXIII.

Jehovah is my God,
My spirit flies to him when in distress,
I hunger and thirst after righteousness,
Like the lone traveller in desert ground,
Weary and faint where is no water found :
His courts I safely trod,
And underneath the shadow of his wings,
I heard and saw unutterable things ;
My soul enjoyed peace and happiness,
Filled as if it were with marrow and fatness :
My foes have felt the rod,
By the edge of the sword doomed to fall,
A portion unto wolves and foxes—all ;
Though wicked tongues against their King transgress,
He reigneth and rejoiceth in his righteousness.

VERSION OF

PSALM LXIV.

Haste to deliver me, O Lord most high !
Hear me and save me from my deadly foes,
From tumults and conspiracies of those
Who rise against me or in ambush lie,
Who also lay snares for me privily,
Spreading their nets and toils in secrecy,
Their mouths are full of bitterness, their words
Are swift as arrows, and as sharp as swords ;
But soon the arrows of the mighty Lord,
Will scatter them in heathen lands forlorn,
His people then will say with one accord,
This is indeed the doing of the Lord !
His foes are scoffed at and laugh'd to scorn ;
The faithful too, whose hearts are in the right,
Who trust in God, and in his laws delight,
They grow and flourish, and find favour in his sight.

PSALM LXV.

Praise God upon Mount Zion, praise his name,
There all flesh come and to his judgments bow ;
My sins also with sorrow I proclaim,
And in Jerusalem perform my vow :

Man chosen by his God how blest is he,
His dwelling is in the sanctuary,
That man its beauty shall behold, and its glory :
Great are the doings of the Lord most high,
His salvation is wonderful to see,
His providence fills all eternity,
It reaches from the earth unto the sky,
It compasseth the broad and boundless sea,
And stills the stormy waves thereof when they arise ;
The madness of the people so he will assuage,
And still the multitude, and quell their rage ;
His dreadful thunder rolls, his lightning flies,
Throughout all lands, the heathen nations quake,
And the high hills from their foundations shake :

But when he visits earth and it adorns,
Soft is the breath of dewy eves and morns,
Rivers of waters then are spread around,
Giving rich increase to the thirsty ground,
The rains descend on valley, hill, and plain,
The furrows are made soft with drops of rain,
The clouds drop fatness, and the year is crown'd
His bounty crowns the year with plenteousness,
Even the dwellers in the wilderness
Rejoice, with plenty all their hills abound,

The folds are full of sheep, the verdant plain
Stands loaded thick with shocks of golden grain,
To gather it the people all employ
Their ready aid, well pleas'd they sing and shout for joy.

PSALM LXVI.

Be joyful in Jehovah all ye lands!
He made you, ye are the work of his hands,
Your enemies he covereth with shame,
Praise him O Jacob ! praise his holy name,
O that ye could his wondrous works behold,
What for our fathers he ordain'd of old,
The waters were subdued at his command,
They walked in the sea as on dry land ;
Israel therefore worshippers shall be,
Of him whose power endures throughout eternity :
Jehovah chastens mankind in his ire,
He tries his servants as silver is tried,
He tried us, our necks were made to bow,
Men ruled over us, and on our heads
Laid heavy burthens, woes, and torments dire,
And made us pass through water and through fire ;
Yet from our God we were not found to slide,
He sav'd our souls, he heard us when we cried,

And we enjoy his loving kindness now,
In tents, in pleasant places we abide,
And fruitful land around our dwellings spreads:

I will with sacrifice perform my vow,
Burnt-offerings prepare with fat of rams,
Oxen, and goats, and sheep, and tender lambs:

Jehovah led his people gloriously,
Their foes confounded were and put to shame,
His face he turned from the ungodly,
He would not bear the sons of wickedness,
He left them to themselves in their distress;
But Jacob to redeem he quickly came,
Blessed is he, and praised be his holy name.

PSALM LXVII.

Show mercy unto us, O power divine !
Oh ! let thy countenance upon thy people shine;
Throughout the earth let thy statutes be known,
Thy saving health unto all nations shown,
They will be glad, they will rejoice to see,
That he is judge who ruleth righteously ;
Let all the people, Lord, praise thee alone,
Let thy people praise thee.

When the Lord looketh down the land to bless,
 Earth gives her increase out and plenteousness,
 He comes and visits his inheritance,
 And is a tower of strength, the rock of our defence :
 The heathen tremble then, the nations see
 There is none other ruler the earth but only he ;
 Let all the people, Lord, praise thee alone,
 Let thy people praise thee.

PSALM LXVIII.

PART FIRST.

When Jehovah riseth in his ire,
 His enemies are scattered abroad,
 Dispersed as smoke, dissolved as wax by fire,
 And utterly destroyed before the mighty Lord :
 Cease not O Israel ! to glorify,
 And praise aloud the name of the Most High,
 The God of mercy and of righteousness ;
 Triumphant upon the heavens he rides,
 And on the whirlwind, and its fury guides ;
 He is a Father to the fatherless,
 The widow findeth favour at his hands,
 He maketh brothers dwell in amity,
 He brought his people from captivity,
 Leaving their foes to perish in strange lands :

When Jehovah went forth before the host,
And led our armies in the wilderness,
Heaven drooped at his presence, the earth shook,
Sinai shook and trembled before God,
But he prepared us a place of rest,
For the congregation a dwelling-place,
He sent rain too on his inheritance,
Refreshing the dry land with drops of rain :
God spake the word and put to flight our foes,
At his command the valiant men arose.
Kings and their armies heard and fled away,
Leaving our fathers to divide the spoil,
They who had gathered straw and tempered clay,
And lain amongst the pots when spent with toil,
He nourished, and made them strong and bold,
He made them swift also as doves, whose wings
Are silver and whose feathers are like gold.
When for their sakes he smote and scatter'd kings,
Then were they white as snow upon Salmon.

PART SECOND.

As is the hill of Basan, so is Sinai,
Yea, beautiful it is, as is Basan ;
Why tremble ye O hills ! this is the hill
The Lord delighteth in to dwell for ever,

His chariots are twenty thousand, and Thousands of angels wait on his command :

O praise Jehovah ! for his salvation,
He saved our souls alive, praise his goodness,
He smote our enemies their heads upon,
And cast them out, O praise ! his righteousness :

He said, my people I will bring again,
As from Basan and the deep sea of old they came,
Their feet dipped in blood of princes slain,
And the tongues of their dogs red with the same,
Their enemies also led captive; then
Their lives they ransom'd, receiving gifts for men :

Behold Jehovah ! when in his glory,
When worshipped in the sanctuary,
The singing men go first, then the minstrels,
Damsels are in the midst with their timbrels.
Benjamin is there, princes of Judah,
Princes of Zabalon and Napthali,
All Israel bows down and worships the Most High :

When mighty men are scattered afar,
Spearmen and all who take delight in war,
When they of Egypt and the Morion lands,
Will come before his throne and lift their hands,
The rulers of the earth rich offerings bring,
Perform their vows and worship heaven's King,

In him the chosen people will rejoice,
He sitteth in the heavens above, and shrouds
The splendour of his majesty in clouds,
His voice from clouds and the thick darkness sends,
It is a mighty and a glorious voice,
Is heard and over all the world extends ;
Dominion to Jacob he has given,
Praise him O Israel ! who sits and reigns in heaven.

PSALM LXIX.

FIRST PART.

Lord ! save me, hear my cry,
The waters of the deep encompass me,
My dwelling-place is in the stormy sea ;
My flesh is weary and my throat is dry,
With calling on the name of the Most High ;
O Lord ! defend my cause,
My singleness of heart is known to thee,
And all my faults and my simplicity,
That I am weak, that numerous are those
Who seek to slay me : mighty are my foes !
Thy zeal hath ate me up,
I suffered the taunts and scoffs of men
And was estranged from my brethren,

I put on sackcloth, I was made to sup
The dregs of bitterness out of thy cup :
For mercy now I crave,
Thy covenant my spirit yearns to keep,
Oh ! leave me not to perish in the deep,
My soul amidst the floods of waters save,
Yea, out of the mouth of the yawning grave :
I stand the scorn of all,
The drunkard's song, men sitting in the gate,
The very elders mock my fallen state,
When hungered for meat they give me gall,
And vinegar to quench my burning thirst withal.

PART SECOND.

My foes are strangers unto righteousness,
Their eyes are blinded by prosperity,
To gather spoil—for rapine they prepare,
And men already smitten to oppress ;
But soon themselves shall heavy burthens bear,
Their heads bowed down with woe and misery,
The feast and banquet will their souls ensnare,
And stores of wealth will their destruction be ;
They will be as are the children of wrath,
When the Lord in his anger quells their pride,
Their dwellings desolated in fierce strife,
Lo ! there are none that in their tents abide,

Abandoned to guilt and in distress,
They fall from wickedness to wickedness,
Their names then blotted from the Book of Life,
They are not found with those of the true faith,
And are indeed become as the children of wrath :

PART THIRD.

For me at early morn,
I offer songs of praise when I arise,
More pleasing to the Lord than sacrifice,
The sacrifice of fat, the hoof, the horn,
Of oxen when his altars they adorn ;
To God glad homage pay,
His City and Zion shall saved be,
And Judah be brought from captivity ;
Beneath his throne the subject nations lay,
He sees and rules mankind with equal sway,
And his behests, heaven, earth, and boundless seas obey.

PSALM LXX.

My God ! deliver me,
And let my enemies confounded be,
They seek my life, they slander my good name,
Let them be turned back and put to shame ;
But they who trust in thee,
Shall live in peace and in prosperity ;

I that am poor will hymns of praises sing,
And with my people ready homage bring,
To Jacob's God, deliverer, and mighty king.

PSALM LXXI.

In Jehovah I trust,
I praise his name, he hath preserved me,
He raised me to honour from the dust,
He is my rock, my castle of safety,
The refuge of my soul from tyranny,
Therefore my mouth shall praise him with a song,
My tongue tell of his goodness all day long,
From my youth up he hath sustained me,
He hath upheld me from my mother's womb ;
Now in old age, Lord ! cast me not away,
When my strength faileth, be my hope, my stay,
That I may gain in peace the silent tomb ;
Seeing my God hath not forsaken me,
They who conspire against me privily,
Shame and dishonour will their portion be.

Jehovah ! in mercy
Is excellent, his goodness knows no end ;
He ceaseth not to guard and succour me,

When young he sav'd me from the tyrant's rage,
With honour he hath crowned my old age,
And rais'd up comforters on every side ;
The holy one of Israel, my cries
Heareth, when I before his footstool bend,
Therefore to serve him my whole soul I lend,
To praise him on the harp, I will arise,
And instruments of melody provide ;
Seeing my God hath not forsaken me,
They who conspire against me privily,
Shame and dishonour will their portion be.

PSALM LXXII.

Grant wisdom O Jehovah ! to the king,
And the king's son endue with righteousness,
That they may judge the people right, and bring
Salvation unto them in their distress ;
The hills shall then rejoice, the vallies sing,
Mountains be crown'd with peace and plenteousness,
Jacob with joy will call the Lord upon,
From generation to generation,
Long as the sun and moon endure the world to bless :
His coming is like unto drops of rain,
Or on a fleece of wool the falling dew,

Or waters poured out upon the plain,
Which the green herb and tender grass renew,
He covereth the wilderness with grain,
Who dwell therein to him the knee will bow,
His foes shall lick the dust,—his power extends
From sea to sea, and reaches the world's ends;
The homage of mankind to him alone is due :

The kingdoms of the isles, and of Saba,
Shall precious gifts prepare and presents bring,
The kings of Tharsis and Arabia,
Shall seek to honour him of kings the King,
Sheba pure gold will bring, and cassia,
And safety seek, beneath his powerful wings :

Upon Jehovah, all the earth will call,
For his dominion is over all,
He reigns for evermore, and doeth wondrous things.

PSALM LXXIII.

Mercy and loving kindness have been shown
In Israel, to all whose hearts were true ;
Yet to my soul is deep affliction known,
Seeing the heathen are triumphant now :

And lo! the wicked in prosperity,
Have not the fear of death before their eyes,
Nor do misfortunes in their paths arise,

They are not visited as other men ;
But puffed up and full of vanity,
Their eyes with fatness swell, and gladness when
Glutted with blood and lust and cruelty ;
They are corrupt, they utter blasphemy,
They set themselves to talk of the Most High,
Their mouths are stretched forward unto heaven,
And throughout all the earth their voices sound,
Saying, " how should Jehovah these things know ?
Tush ! he regardeth nought beneath the sky :"
Deceiving thus mankind, they powerful grow,
Riches to them and length of days are given,
And so they flourish honoured, great and renowned :

Have I indeed then cleans'd my heart in vain,
And washed my hands in innocency,
Chastened me by night and all day long ;
Had I not better joyed these men among ?

Nay fly their tents, unto Jehovah flee,
Unto his courts, to the sanctuary,
There thou wilt learn to know why these things be ;

Strangers to God on slippery places stand,
From whence cast down they perish suddenly,
Come to a fearful end, tremble, and quake ;
They shall have no abiding in the land,
But be as dreams to men when they awake :

My help in all flesh faileth, nought remains,
I am aggrieved in my heart and reins,
What have I then in heaven or earth but thee
My God! in whom alone I trust for ever,
From the oppressor's wrong, me to deliver,
That I may live to praise the Holy One,
Within Jerasalem, his own city,
In the gate of the lovely daughter of Zion.

PSALM LXXIV.

PART FIRST.

Jehovah hath forsaken Israel,
His people and the sheep of his pasture,
Zion also, in which he loved to dwell;
Her children now hard tyranny endure ;
Zion, renown'd of old, is fallen low,
A place of desolation and of woe,
Within her walls the shouts of war arise,
And hostile banners on her ramparts fly :

The thick trees of the forest, which men prize
For ornaments of wood and carvery,
The workmen hewed down, and timber thence
They brought and fashioned in great excellence ;
With axes these and hammers they broke down, .

And in the holy places set on fire ;
Thus they make havoc in the house of God,
The people spoil, and swallow up the land :
Will not Jehovah rise against such foes ?
Shall they blaspheme his holy name for ever ?
He will arise, he will his arm lay bare,
And from his bosom pluck forth his right-hand,
Then they shall perish utterly who are,
The tyrants and polluters of the land.

PART SECOND.

Of old the God of battles was our King,
He divided the waters of the sea,
The Leviathan of Egypt he smote,
He broke the heads of dragons in the deep,
He fed his people in the wilderness,
And gave them water out of the dry rock :
The day O Lord is thine, the night is thine,
For light thou hast prepared the glorious sun,
And set for boundaries unto the earth,
Summer and winter, autumn, and the spring :
Still the ungodly cease not to blaspheme,
Their folly it increaseth more and more :
But God will rise up and maintain his cause,
Remembering them whom he redeemed of old,
His turtle-doves deliver from the foe,

Upon the congregation power bestow,
And loving-kindness to his chosen people show, 21

PSALM LXXV.

We do give thanks to God, we do give thanks,
Honour and glorify his holy name,
Great are the wonders which his ways adorn,
By him the pillars of the world are born,
He is amongst his chosen people—and
Rules over them and gladdens all the land.

The foolish I rebuked, and the proud,
I said unto them, set not up your horns,
With necks stretch'd out set not your horns on high,
For safety comes not from the east, the west,
Nor in the south will ye protection find,
The Lord alone is ruler of mankind ;
He holdeth in his mighty hand a cup,
The wine in it is red and mixed up,
The pure unto the just he poureth out,
But wicked men shall drink the very dregs.

The God of Jacob praise and magnify,
He raiseth some, and some he casteth down,
Shame and dishonour will the tyrant crown,
Whilst the just man exalts his horn on high.

PSALM LXXVI.

The God of battle is in Jewry known,
His name is great among the chosen race,
In Salem he his wondrous works hath shown,
Upon Mount Zion is his dwelling-place :

Smitten by him the strong high-places yield,
He brake the bow, the spear, the sword, the shield,
Their chariots were o'erwhelmed in the deep,
The horses and the riders overthrown ;
In death the mighty men hath slept the sleep ;
When thunder out of heaven proclaim'd his will,
The earth was struck with terror, and was still ;

In judgment he arose ; then lo ! the meek
And righteous who his protection seek,
Rejoice his ordinances to fulfil ;
The fury of the heathen he will break,
Their princes shall bow down before his throne,
Their kings shall bow their heads before him and be still.

PSALM LXXVII.

For help to heaven I raise my feeble cry,
And call upon the name of the Most High ;
The troubles of the night and evil days,
Torment my soul and compass all my ways,

Sick unto death, I can no comfort find,
Dire terror and dismay have seiz'd my mind :

Will then the Lord absent himself for ever
Is his protection gone for evermore,
Hath he indeed forgotten to be kind,
His favour spent and tender mercies o'er :

I know it is mine own infirmity ;
The ways of God are ways of holiness,
Remember we the deeds of his right-hand,
His wondrous works of old and his glory,
How he deliver'd from captivity,
Jacob and Joseph, your posterity :

The sea saw thee, O God ! the waves did stand,
They stood upright before thy mightiness,
The clouds of heaven their waters poured out,
Air thundered, and thine arrows went about,
Thy voice was heard in pealing thunders round,
Earth shook and lightnings shone upon the ground :

Thy paths O God ! are as in waters deep,
Or in the sea thy footsteps are unknown ;
Thou led thy people from captivity,
By Moses and by Aaron like a flock of sheep.

PSALM LXXVIII.

Hearken O Israel ! I will unfold
Dark sentences and parables obscure,
Things unto your forefathers shown and told,
By prophets, messengers, and spirits pure,
Sent by the Lord, whose mercies still endure,
That their sons' sons and children then unborn,
Might know Jehovah ! whose almighty power
Redeemed them from servitude forlorn,
That they might see the glories which his reign adorn :

And that they might instruct their little ones,
He gave to them a covenant and law,
To hand down unto all generations,
In order that posterity might know
His ordinances, and glad homage show,
And cleave unto the Lord, and seek his face ;
And not like Ephraim unbend the bow,
When he and all the tribes fled in disgrace ;
They were indeed a stubborn and rebellious race :

Remember Egypt, the field of Zoan ;
Forget not ye the Lord and his strong hand,
How he afflicted water, earth, and man,
Think of his plagues in that devoted land ;
He stayed the waves and made them upright stand ;
A cloud by day, by night a flame of fire,

Jacob to guide, were plac'd by his command ;
(Water in desert lands parch'd lips require)
He smote the rock, and streams gush'd forth at their desir

Yet still they murmured, saying altho'
These cooling streams the pains of thirst repress,
Can Moses us supply with food also,
Or will the Lord our board with plenty bless,
And spread a table in the wilderness:
They tempted God thus in the desert-place,
And ceased not to murmur and transgress,
Provoking him to turn away his face,
They were indeed a stubborn and rebellious race.

Jehovah open'd then the gates of heaven,
He made the clouds above to open wide,
And angels' food unto the host was given,
It rained manna thick on every side,
Until their hungry lusts were all supplied,
And they did eat, and satisfy their souls;
The east and south-west winds with fury vied,
Birds in their flight the raging storm controul,
And covered the wilderness with feather'd fowls.

But whilst the meat was even in the mouth,
They from the worship of their God withdrew,
Forgetting all his goodness and his truth,
They with ingratitude past favours view,

Then he forsook them and their leaders slew ;
But soon in mercy cast his wrath away,
For he their vanity and folly knew,
Weak mortals and the beings of a day,
As brief as vapours which upon the waters play :

Forgetting Egypt, the field of Zoan,
The miracles wrought there, the plagues unclean,
Upon the waters, earth, on beasts and man,
Rivers of blood with horror there were seen,
They were devour'd by frogs and lice obscene,
Hail-stones the vines destroyed, trees the frost,
The caterpillar, fruits and herbage green,
Hail-stones and thunder-bolts with fury toss'd,
Their flocks and herds were in that fiery conflict lost.

The pestilence prevail'd, infectious breath
All the Egyptians felt in dismay,
And evil angels, ministers of death,
Of cattle and of men the first born slay,
Loud were the lamentations of that day,
For death had seiz'd his victims in their sleep,
Israel then in haste were forc'd away,
They were led onward like a flock of sheep,
But their pursuers perish'd in the whelming deep.

Jehovah led them to his holy hill,
Subdued the heathén foes and quell'd their rage,

His promises and goodness to fulfil,
He gave them dwellings and a heritage ;
Yet images and idols did engage
Their thoughts to worship vile in the high place,
Like their fore-fathers in a former age ;
Ungrateful thus and covered with disgrace,
They left the Lord their God to follow idols base :
 Isra'l forgetting him and his command,
Did after other gods perversely go,
The Lord then left their habitations, and
Forsook the tabernacle in Silo—
This proved their ruin and their overthrow ;
Their sons and daughters slaves were made or slain,
The land was desolated by the foe,
The blood of priests and people altars stain,
And widows, none were left, in sorrow to complain :
 Their glorious star at length was seen to rise,
Like as a giant when refresh'd with wine,
Then too arose the ruler of the skies !
He rose with majesty and power divine ;
He made Joseph and Ephraim resign,
And fixed his house on Zion's beauteous hill,
He chose a shepherd out of Jesse's line,
Appointing David to perform his will,
To feed his people, and the land with gladness fill.

PSALM LXXIX.

O God ! the heathen thine inheritance,
Have seized on, thy temple they prophane,
They make Jerusalem a heap of stones,
Thy saints and servants left without defence,
Their blood like water floweth from the slain,
Whose flesh a prey to birds and beasts, whose bones
Unburied on every side remain,
The scorn of men, Judea weeps and moans,
They mock her sorrow and deride her groans ;
Will not the Lord away his fury turn,
Or will his jealousy, like fire, for ever burn :

Will he not forth his indignation pour
Upon his enemies who have no law,
And such as never called on his name ;
The heathen who his heritage devour,
And to the captives no compassion show :
His saints for blood upon them vengeance claim,
That all the earth may their Redeemer know ;
Let the blasphemers thy just wrath endure,
Whilst Israel the sheep of thy pasture,
Proclaim the honours which thy reign adorn,
From generations to generations unborn.

PSALM LXXX.

O thou great Shepherd ! that dost Jacob keep,
And leadest Joseph like a flock of sheep ;
Show Benjamin, Manassah, Ephraim,
Thy glory from between the Cherubim ;
Show the light of thy countenance to all,
Thy people who on thee cease not to call ;
Oh ! turn unto us and we shall be whole :

How long wilt thou O Lord ! in trouble keep
Isra'el ? for ever shall they mourn and weep,
Thou feedest them with tears if hunger press,
If thirst thou givest tears in plenteousness,
Abandoned to strife and left forlorn,
They by the enemy are laugh'd to scorn ;
Thy people yet cease not on thee to call ;
Oh ! turn unto us and we shall be whole :

Lo ! out of Egypt thou didst bring a vine,
And cast the heathen out and planted it,
Thou set it that it might have room enough,
And having taken root it fill'd the land,
The shadow of it covered the hills,
Its boughs were like the goodly cedar trees,
It stretched out its branches to the sea,
And boughs umbrageous unto the river :

Then why hast thou O God ! broke down its hedge,
That all they that go by pluck off its grapes ;
The wild boar of the wood now roots it up,
And the beasts of the field its fruit devour :

Look down from heaven O Lord ! upon this vine
And vine-yard which thou planted and made strong ;
Behold it is cut down and burnt with fire ;
Let the foe perish too at thy rebuke :

We then will rise again at thy right hand,
As we arose of old by thy command ;
Thy face will shine whilst on thy name we call ;
Oh ! turn unto us and we shall be whole.

PSALM LXXXI.

In praises to the Lord yourselves employ,
Rejoice and sing before him songs of joy,
Take up a psalm the loud tabret to suit,
And harp of many strings, psalter, and lute ;
The statutes to fulfil and banquet crown,
Blow ye the trumpets shrill on the new moon,
As ordained to Israel, when they came
From Egypt, from the land of grief and shame ;
He tri'd them at the wells of Moribah ;
He led and guided them by night and day ;

Their shoulders then from heavy burthens free,
Their hands in making pots had ceas'd to toil,
They left the house of bondage fill'd with spoil ;
Their God delivered them triumphantly !

He from idolatry redeem'd them, and
From Egypt brought them forth with a strong hand ;
But in Jehovah when they ceas'd to trust,
They were abandoned to their heart's lust :
Left to their own imagination vain,
Abominations vile their altar's stain ;
Had Israel hearkened unto thee
O God ! thou wouldst have spoiled the enemy,
Their armed bands o'erthrown, disperse, and sever,
And Jacob have established for ever ;
Their food had been the finest flour of wheat,
From fields thick covered with full white shocks,
And honey pure, deliciously sweet,
Even fine honey from the stony rocks.

PSALM LXXXII.

God standing in the midst of the mighty,
Ruleth and judgeth them and all their gods ;
By them the wicked are accepted, and
They give wrong judgment and oppress the land,

Cease to defend the fatherless and poor,
The substance of the widow they devour ;
They once esteem'd as sons of the Most High,
Renown'd for justice, truth, and majesty,
Are now become of violence, the source
On earth, whose foundations are out of course ;
And they like other men, are doomed all
To die, and shall like other princes fall :

Arise then unto judgment O Jehovah ! hence
The heathen nations shall be thine inheritance.

PSALM LXXXIII.

Exalt thyself O God ! let all the Gentiles hear,
And tremble at thy mighty name, and quake with fear.

Tumultuously thine enemies arise,
And evil counsels holding day by day,
Mischief against thy heritage devise,
Gathering themselves together in array,
Ishmael, Edom, Moab, Hagareens,
Geba, Ammon, Am'lek, Philistia,
Fam'd Tyre also to their bad counsel leans,
And even Assur listens to obey ;
To save the sons of Lot, uniting all
Hear the loud summons and attend the call ;

Let Isra'l perish, and the hated name
Be blotted out for ever! they exclaim :
 Serve them O God ! as thou dist Midian,
And at Endor, Jabin, and Sisera,
Who led the armies onward of Can'an,
Which fell, or by Kison were swept away ;
Oh ! make their princes like Zeb and Zeba,
Make them as Orcb and as Salmana ;
Oh ! make them even like unto a wheel,
To fly as stubble flies before the wind,
Swift as a fire that burneth up the trees,
Of the thick forest on the mountain's side,
Rising, consumes and rages on the hills ;
So let the heathen thy fierce tempests feel,
And all thy storms, thy plagues and miseries,
Let these pursue close on their steps behind,
And desolation in their tents abide ;
While ruin with dismay their armies fills,
They will not dare to meet the enemy,
For death awaits them or captivity ;
That all the earth may know the Holy One,
Jehovah ! sits on high and rules the world alone.

PSALM LXXXIV.

How amiable are thy courts O Lord !
And pleasant dwelling-places on Zion ;
Their towers to turtle-doves safety afford,
And swallows hang their nests the walls upon ;
My heart is fix'd, my spirit yearns to bring,
Sweet sacrifices there to God my King !
And in his courts and at his altars be,
His goodness to behold, and his glory : Selah !

Blest is the man O God ! who trusts in thee,
Calls on thy name, and walks in the right way,
(While passing through this vale of misery)
To him the thirsty valley of Baca
Shall be as water-pools, and like a well
To give him strength, to gain Zion and dwell
In the sanctuary, where is no fear,
The God of battle guards his people there : Selah !

One day O Lord ! in thy sanctuary,
Is better than a thousand days mispent,
In gorgeous palaces of vanity,
With wicked men on crimes and mischief bent,
In it I rather would a keeper be,
Than live in the tents of impiety,
Oh ? let thy face on thine anointed shine,
His hopes are plac'd in thee alone, O power divine ! Selah !

PSALM LXXXV.

Jacob in bonds no longer shall remain,
For now the Lord is gracious again,
To make an end of Isra'l he forbore,
Remembering their transgressions no more,
His wrath indignant he hath turn'd away,
And ceased his fierce anger to display ;
He hath not cast his people off for ever,
Nor Israel forgot in his displeasure,
He will show mercy and his salvation,
From generation to generation. Selah !

The king and all the saints have heard a voice,
Be glad O Israel ! Jacob rejoice,
For your deliverance is hard at hand,
And ye shall live and prosper in the land,
Mercy and truth be seen to dwell together,
Righteousness and peace to kiss each other,
Righteousness from heav'n hath looked down,
And peace shall flourish and your labours crown,
The earth shall give rich increase, and afford
Abundance to thy heritage, O mighty Lord ! Selah !

PSALM LXXXVI.

Hear me O God ! I am in misery,
I am in trouble, listen unto me,

Send comfort to my spirit, hear my cry,
Oh ! let my thoughts be lifted up on high,
That I thy tender mercies may record,
Thy loving kindness, thy goodness O Lord !
For thou art great, thou doest wondrous things,
And ruleth over all, the King of kings,
Among the gods none are like unto thee ;
Princes bow down, ye nations bend the knee,
Throughout all lands his worship shall be known,
And adoration be to him alone : Selah !

Teach me O God ! of truth the pleasant ways,
And I will walk therein ; my voice will raise,
And of thy mercy and the goodness tell,
That raised up my soul on high from hell ;
Great is the Lord ! long-suffering is he,
He hath assuag'd my grief and misery,
And will my sorrows and my wrongs redress,
Send comfort to my soul and plenteousness,
While mighty men against me schemes devise,
I have found grace and favour in his eyes,
I will give thanks unto my God therefore,
And praise his holy name for ever more. Selah.

PSALM LXXXVII.

Jehovah loves the gates of thee Zion,
Thy foundations are on his holy hills,
The Lord well pleased looks thy towers upon,
Thy excellence the earth with wonder fills ;
Know ye of Rahab and of Babylon,
Moria, Palestine, and men of Tyre,
That in this mountain 'bides the Holy One,
In Zion dwells the everlasting Sire,
The minstrels there sing praises to his name,
And trumpets sound aloud, his glorious deeds proclaim.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

Great Lord of our salvation, Jehovah !
Vouchsafe to hear my cry,
I am in tribulation, night and day,
Despair and misery,
Counted as one already in the grave,
And free among the dead,
As one not having strength himself to save,
Or from the place of darkness lift his head ;
Penance in the vext deep my soul performs,
And thou O Lord ! hast cov'ed me with all thy storms
Selah !

Lo! my companions stand off afar,
I am abhorred of men,
I am as if a captive of the war,
Dark is my loathsome den ;
Have I then lifted up my voice in vain ?
Shall I be put to shame ?
Doth kindness only with the dead remain?
Will they arise to praise thy holy name ?
Shall thy deeds in the silent grave be shown ?
The place where all things are forgotten and unknown :

Selah !

To thee O Lord ! are my afflictions known,
My grief and misery,
Yet to my soul no comfort has been shown,
Thy face is hid from me,
I am as one appointed now to die,
Me fears of death surround,
Thy judgments from youth up, upon me lie,
In terror and dismay I tread the ground,
My foes as water rise on every side,
Whilst afar off my lovers and my friends abide, Selah !

VERSION OF PSALM LXXXIX.

PART FIRST.

My songs O Lord ! shall of thy goodness be,
From generation to generation ;
Thy truth endures for ever, thy mercy
Unto the sons of Jacob hath been shown,
And unto David, to thy chosen one,
Whose seed thy covenant will now deliver,
Establishing the throne in peace for ever :
The heav'ns declare thy deeds O Jehovah !
The congregation of thy saints praise thee,
Among the clouds, exultingly they say,
" To God none other can compared be,
He rules the raging of the stormy sea,
And stills the waves thereof when they arise,
His power is o'er the earth and reaches to the skies :
Egypt thou hast subdued and laid low,
And scattered abroad the enemy,
The heavens are thine, the earth is thine also,
Its foundations of old were laid by thee,
The north, the south, Hermon, Tabor agree,
To worship and bow down at thy command,
For mighty is thine arm, and high is thy right-hand :
Righteousness and truth with thee abide,
Mercy is thine, wisdom and equity,

Thy countenance shall be the light and guide,
Of such as put their trust O Lord ! in thee,
And who delight to praise thy name daily ;
Israel shall bow down at early morn,
To worship thee whose arm hath lifted up her horn :”

The Lord is our defence, Jehovah is our King !
He spoke in visions to his holy saints, saying—

“ David amongst his people hast been found
Faithful, I have anointed him with oil,
His name shall be exalted far around,
His seed shall be established for ever ;
The foe no longer shall my people spoil,
But shall be put to flight, or left to scorn,
For I will smite them down before his face,
And spread my peace around his dwelling-place,
High in my name he shall exalt his horn,
Dominion he shall have unto the sea,
And stretch his right-hand out unto the river ;
He on his Father and his God shall call,
Who will his strength, help, and salvation be,
To set his first-born son above the princes all ;
But if his sons’ sons should forsake my law,
My statutes and my ordinances meek ;
Then unto them I will my judgments show,
And on their guilty heads fierce vengeance wreak ;

But with David my covenant shall be,
My promises to him they shall not fail,
His seed shall be as heaven's lights before me,
The sun, the moon, in bright effulgence sent,
Faithful witnesses in the firmament,
The princes against them shall not prevail,
For unto them dominion is given,
Their throne established as are the days of Heaven."

PART SECOND.

Thou hast forsaken thine anointed king,
And dash'd his fame and glory to the ground,
All faith and covenants with him breaking,
Thy armed bands his palaces surround ;
His hedges and strong-holds are broken down,
The vine-yards and green fields neglected lie,
A spoil and prey to all the passers by,
Thou hast made a reproach him and his crown ;

"Though rage and thy right arm were raised high,
Thou led his armies not to victory,
But turn'd their swords aside in mortal fight,
Filling his foes with wonder and delight ;
His days are shortened by thee, his throne
Dishonoured, its glories lost and gone :

But will the Lord absent himself for ever ?
Will his wrath burn like fire for evermore ?

For nought in man he hath not breathed breath,
And who that liveth now shall not see death,
Short is the space which here I have to dwell,
Will he not save me from the gates of hell,
Remembering his truth, his covenant,
His kindness unto David his servant ;
I will therefore, though bearing the rebukes of men,
Not cease to praise the Lord my God. Amen. Amen.

PSALM XC.

Great Jehovah ! has been our safe refuge,
From generation to generation ;
E'er the hills were brought forth and mountains huge,
Before the world began ; in splendour shone
His glory, for he fill'd the universal throne :
Left by the Lord men certain ruin find,
Again he comes and spreads his blessings on mankind ;
A thousand years to him are but as yesterday,
As a watch of the night they pass away ;
The life of man is even as a dream,
It fades and dies like the flow'rs of the field,
And grass which in the morning grows is green,
Cut down at eve quite dry and dead they seem ;

Thus desolate are the ungodly seen,
When to his judgments they are made to yield,
Then their misdeeds are placed in his sight,
And all their secret sins are brought to light,
If he be wroth, our years are gone as when grown old,
Our days are as a tale that has been told ;
The age of man is three-score years and ten,
And if he should endure to four-score years,
His life is but labour and weakness then,
A state of sorrowing, of grief and tears ;
Teach us O Lord ! to number out our days,
That we our hearts to wisdom may apply,
And turn ourselves to thee, walk in thy ways,
And on thy tender mercies still rely :
Plagues manifold we have been doomed to,
Many have been the years of our adversity,
Show favour therefore to thy servants now,
And to their sons the glory of thy majesty,

PSALM XCI.

They who dwell in the courts of the Most High !
The righteous and just among mankind,
Under his shadow shall protection find ;
They prosper that upon his promises rely :

From spoilers he will be thy strong defence,
He will preserve thee from the pestilence ;
Wings of the cherubim shall safety yield,
Covering thee as with a mighty shield,
Thou need'st not fear the terrors of the night,
Nor arrows scattered abroad by light,
Plague that in darkness finds its dreadful way,
Nor pestilence destroying at noon-day ;
A thousand shall fall down where thou dost stand,
Ten thousand shall be slain at thy right-hand !
The end of the ungodly thou shalt see,
But deadly plague and pestilence shall not harm thee :

Thy God ! salvation unto thee hath shown,
Angels are charg'd to guide thee on thy way,
Lest thou should'st dash thy foot against a stone,
They will be thy support, thy staff, thy stay,
Lions and dragons thou shalt tread upon,
Even the adder and the young lion ;
Since thou hast set thine heart on the Most High,
And bowed down thyself at his command,
He will exalt thy glory to the sky,
Give thee long life, and shed his blessings on the land.

PSALM XCII.

To give thanks to the Lord it is seemly,
Raise up your voices then to the Most High !
Tell of his truth in seasons of the night,
Proclaim his goodness at the morning's light,
Let stringed instruments sound merrily,
And with the lute and harp makè melody,
For great and wondrous are his works indeed,
And in his wisdom he hath made them all !
Fools understand not this, they take no heed,
In their prosperity and quickly fall :

But I that am anointed with fresh oil,
Shall be avenged of the enemy,
The Lord of hosts exalteth high my horn,
Even as is that of the unicorn ;
The just he hath planted in a good soil,
To flourish like the pine and cedar tree,
They in his house and in his courts take root,
Flourish and in due season bring forth fruit ;
To show that whom the Lord delights to bless,
Shall prosper in his sight, and in righteousness.

PSALM XCIII.

Jehovah reigneth in glory array'd,
Clothed with honour, truth, and majesty ;

The round world is on its foundation laid
Immovable, ordain'd by him to be,
Whose throne endureth everlastingly ;
The floods lift up their voice, tempests arise,
Waves of the ocean rise tumultuously,
And madly rage, but he that rules the skies,
Stilleth the storm, for sure are his testimonies.

PSALM XCIV.

Will not the Lord pursue the ungodly ?
With vengeance though they reign triumphantly ;
Disdainfully they boast, and in their rage
Destroy the people and their heritage ;
The widow and the stranger they betray,
And lo ! the fatherless become their prey ;
Tush ! they exclaim, " Jehovah doth not see,
Our ways by him will not regarded be ;"
Take heed ye fools ! he that planted the ear,
And made the eye, will he not see nor hear ?
He nutureth the heathen, and his law,
Teacheth man his ordinances to know,
He views the thoughts of mortals weak and vain,
But shall their crimes unpunished remain ?

The man he chasteneth, blessed is he,
Who learning patience in adversity,
Waiteth until prepared is the pit,
For the oppressor, doom'd to enter it;
When my feet slid the Lord bore me up,
His loving kindness did my heart console,
He poured comfort out into my cup,
And sent sweet consolation to my soul,
Mighty is he, and it is his to honour or controul.

PSALM XCV.

In the salvation of the Lord rejoice,
And with thanksgiving press his courts into,
There in his presence raise a cheerful voice,
And with sweet psalms your joy and gladness show ;
The Lord our God is full of majesty,
A mighty God ! above all other gods is he :
His hand supports the corners of the earth,
The wonders of the hills are his also,
The sea and all in it owe unto him their birth,
Both water and dry land, his power and wisdom show,
Then let us worship him with glory crown'd,
The Lord our maker on his holy ground ;

Humble our hearts and bring that voice to mind,
Heard by our fathers in the wilderness,
When unto foul rebellion inclin'd,
They murmured aloud in their distress,
Tempting the Lord their God to wrath, to swear
Zion they should not gain, nor enter there ;
For he for forty years had looked on,
Grieved by that perverse generation.

PSALM XCVI.

Oh! sing unto the Lord, sing a new song,
Ye people unto him your homage pay,
Declare his triumphs the heathen among,
And tell of his salvation day by day ;
Only to him worship and power belong,
He ruleth over all with boundless sway,
(Gods of the Gentiles are but idols vain)
But he o'er heaven and earth extends his glorious reign :
With presents enter ye his courts into,
Worship in the beauty of holiness,
All the whole earth before him stand in awe,
For he will judge the world in righteousness ;
Then shall the heavens above and earth below,
Rejoice, be glad, and his great goodness bless :

The sea and all in it their voices raise,
The fields shall sing for joy, and forests sound the praise
Of him to whom both Jew and Gentile go,
Judged according to his ordinance and law.

PSALM XCVII.

The Lord our God is King ! O earth be glad thereof !
Ye islands multitudinous be glad thereof ;
With him righteousness and judgment meet,
He maketh clouds and thick darkness his seat,
Before him goeth forth a flaming fire,
Which burneth up his foes on every side,
Upon the earth his lightnings fierce transpire,
And shake the world to its foundation wide,
Like wax the mountains at his presence melt,
Jacob his mighty works hath seen and felt,
(But worshippers of images remain,
Confounded with their gods and idols vain ;)
Zion beholds his glory day by day,
Rejoice therefore ye daughters of Judah,
A light is seen to shine the righteous to bless,
Even Jehovah in beauty of holiness !

PSALM XCVIII.

Oh ! sing unto Jehovah a new song,
He hath done marvellously mankind among,
With mighty arm, and with his own right-hand
Showing his power he gain'd the victory,
Justice dispersed to the heathen land,
And loving-kindness Jacob unto thee :
To him therefore in haste your offerings bring,
And let your grateful hearts rejoice and sing,
With trumpets' clangour loud, and with sweet shawms
And stringed harps sing ye thanksgiving psalms,
Let the earth make a noise and all thereon,
The sea and all therein raise a loud voice,
Floods clap your hands, ye mighty hills rejoice,
Rejoice O lovely daughter of Zion !
For the Lord comes to judge mankind; and he
Will bring to judgment all in truth and equity.

PSALM XCIX.

Jehovah dwells between the cherubim,
Although the heathen rage, worship ye him,
For he is King in Zion, and his fame
Is gone abroad, Most Holy is his name ;

Jacob of old he punished, for he
Judgeth the earth in truth and equity,
Among the priests, Moses and Aaron, who
With Samuel cried his throne unto,
He heard and answered from the dark cloud,
And unto them his testimonies show'd,
Israel he forgave, the saints declar'd his will,
Worship your God therefore on Zion's holy hill.

PSALM C.

Be joyful in Jehovah, O ye lands !
Come ye before his presence with a song,
He made us, we are the work of his hands,
Worship and power to him alone belong.
With thanksgiving go ye into his gates,
And enter ye into his courts with praise,
There mercy everlasting you awaits,
For gracious is the Lord in all his ways :
Your sons shall therefore call his mighty name upon
With joy, from generation to generation.

PSALM CI.

My song of mercy, justice, and judgment shall be,
I will sing praises O Jehovah ! unto thee ;

Learn me O Lord ! thy ways to understand,
That I may walk therein with my whole heart ;
No iniquity I will take in hand,
Nor in base schemes of evil men bear part ;

Ingratitude shall not cleave unto me,
The man with haughty looks and stomach high,
I will not suffer such a one,—nor he
That slandereth his neighbour privily ;

The true of heart, the faithful witnesses,
Shall dwell with me, and in the presence stand
Of God, for he will not endure deceitfulness,
In his own holy city, nor his chosen land.

PSALM CII.

PART FIRST,

Hear O Jehovah ! let my cry come unto thee,
In my distress turn not thy countenance from me ;

My wretched days like fleeting shadows pass,
My bones consumed are as if by heat,
My heart cast down is withered like grass.
With trouble I forget my bread to eat,
Unto my bones the sinews scarcely cleave,
Sorely afflicted I lament and grieve,

An owl on the house-top is as my fate,
Or pelican in places desolate ;
I am reviled by the enemy,
Exposed all day long to enmity,
Ashes instead of bread my food have been,
And in my drink, my tears are mingled seen ;
Thou dost on me in indignation frown,
Thou took'st me up and now castest me down ;
My days are gone as quick as fleeting shadows pass,
I am cut down and withered away like grass.

PART SECOND

The glory of the Lord endures for ever !
Throughout the generations of mankind ;
For fear of him the guilty Gentiles quiver,
And Kings bow down before his majesty ;
The time is come ! Jacob shall mercy find ;
The saints his fallen state with anguish see,
Thy walls Zion which now in ruins lie :
And all thy tow'rs again shall be exalted high.

God looketh down from his sanctuary
Out of the heavens above, and hears the cry
Of the sad mourners in captivity,
Saving them, though appointed then to die,
That they his praise in Sion may declare,
And in Jerusalem bow down and worship there.

His fame is gone abroad throughout all lands ;
The deep foundations of the world he laid,
The heavens also are the work of his hands,
Yet they shall perish though divinely made,
They like unto a garment shall wax old,
And as a vesture they shall changed be,
But God endureth, and he will uphold
His servants ever more, and reign triumphantly.

PSALM CIII.

Praise O my soul ! the great Jehovah praise
For all his loving-kindness unto thee,
With gladness now he crowneth all thy days
Viewing in mercy thine infirmity,
He satisfieth thee with all things good,
Like the young eagle strong and lusty made with food :
Judgment the Lord in righteousness displays,
To them that by oppression suffer wrong ;
To Moses he showed his wondrous ways
And works, the sons of Israel among ;
Our faults are many should he them regard,
And us according to our transgressions reward :
The height of heaven above to earth compare,
So great and wonderful his mercies are

Behold east from the west the distance wide !
So far from us his wrath is turn'd aside,
For as a father for his children cares,
The Lord regards us and his chosen people spares :
How we are made well knows the Lord our King,
That mortals are but dust, remembering
Like flowers they flourish and like them decay,
Which when the wind blows on them fade away ;
But they that fear the Lord and him adore,
Shall live, for his mercy endures for ever more.
Praise him ye angels ! praise his holy name,
Ye hear his voice and his commands fulfil ;
Ye heavenly host his ministers of flame,
That stand before him and perform his will,
Praise him whose dominion is over all,
And worthy to be praised, praise him O my soul !

PSALM CIV.

PART FIRST.

Sing Praises to Jehovah O my Soul !

Thou art exceeding glorious O God !
Clothed with honour and with majesty,
Thou deckest thee with light as with a robe,
And like a curtain spreadest out the heaven,

The beams of thine abode are in the deep,
The clouds thy chariot are, thy wings the wind,
Angels thou hast created, spirits pure,
And made thy messengers a flame of fire,
Thou laidest the foundation of the earth,
That it should not be mov'd at any time,
For with the deep profound thou covered it,
And compass'd it around with all its hills;
At thy rebuke the world of waters flee,
Thy thunder and thy voice make them afraid,
The billows mountains high make haste and go,
To seek the place appointed them below,
Bounds that are fixt for them by thy command,
Which they can never pass nor deluge the dry land.

PART SECOND.

Jehovah in his goodness sendeth springs,
Amongst the hills cool streams of waters flow,
To drink thereof beasts of the forests go,
Wild asses from afar thirst thither brings;
Fowls of the air find there habitation,
They sing among the trees and build thereon;
The rivers thence descend mankind to bless,
And fill the thirsty land with plenteousness,
To cattle giving grass, to man herbs, and
Food to sustain him and his strength expand,

Oil that his countenance may not be sad,
And wine that rejoiceth the heart and makes man glad.

PART THIRD.

Majestical the trees on Labanon appear,
The lofty cedar trees planted by nature there ;
Birds of the air their nests upon them build,
A dwelling for the stork their branches yield ;
The wild goat feeds on rocks and mountains huge,
And in the hills the coney finds a safe refuge ;
God hath appointed seasons for the moon,
The sun its rising knows and going down,
He spreadeth out thick darkness, that it may be night,
Then the beasts of the forest wander in his sight,
The lion roams in absence of the day,
Roaring for hunger and demands his prey ;
The sun rising array'd in his glory, when
They get themselves away, each couching in his den ;
Then men go forth to work while it is day,
And to their labour even till the evening grey.

PART FOURTH.

Thy works are great and manifold O God !
And in thy wisdom thou hast made them all,
The earth is filled full of thy bounty,
As also is the wide and boundless sea,

Where go the ships, leviathans appear,
And beasts innumerable great and small,
They sport therein and take their pastime there,
For meat in due season on God they call,
Whose hand is open to supply them all;
They perish when he turns his face away,
Lost and forsaken in the dust of death;
Again he visits them and the whole earth,
Rejoices animated by his breath;
The majesty of God endures for ever,
The glory of his works for ever more,
The solid earth trembles his face before,
The hills when his hands heavy on them lay,
Are shaken and his foes consume away,
I will as long as I exist my God adore,
And give him thanks and praise for ever, ever more.

PSALM CV.

Oh! praise the Lord, praise ye his holy name,
Give thanks and praise his goodness with a song,
Unto the nations his glory proclaim,
To whom might, majesty, and power belong;

Seek ye his face and in his strength be strong,
Ye children of Abraham his servant,
Remember his mercies your tribes among,
The oath, the promise, and the covenant,
Which he did to a thousand generations grant,
A law for Isaac and for Jacob meant,
To Israel an everlasting testament,
Saying—to you I gave Canaan, and
Inheritance, when strangers in the land,
For sake of Abraham reprov'd kings,
When sojourning Egyptians among,
The patriarchs secure beneath my wings,
Anointing them that did to me belong,
I said O King! see that ye do my saints no wrong :
 When Jehovah was pleased to send dearth,
And famine spread abroad upon the earth,
Joseph was sent before, seized and sold,
Confined and his feet with fetters bound,
Into his soul entered iron cold,
Thus tortured and tried 'till guiltless found,
The king said then let him delivered be,
The ruler of the people set him free,
Over his house he made him lord also,
To do his will, and wisdom unto princes show ;

Israel after unto Egypt came,
Jacob a stranger in the land of Ham,
There increased to be a mighty name,
Dreaded and hated were the children of Abram :

To guide his people, Moses and Aaron,
Two chosen servants the Lord fixed on ;
To show his will and wondrous works proclaim,
He called darkness and thick darkness came,
The rivers became blood, the fish were slain,
The ponds innumerable frogs forth bring,
That even fill the chambers of the king,
He spake the word, then reptiles rank combine
With flies and lice, all to pollute and stain,
Hail-stones and flames of fire he sent for rain,
He smote the trees, the fig-tree and the vine,
Locusts and caterpillars eating clean
Both the fruits of the earth and herbage green,
The first-born, all were slain by power divine ;

But Isra'l full of strength in all the tribes,
Egypt had long regarded with dismay,
Silver and gold they offered as bribes,
Rejoicing them to forward on their way ;
A cloud by day, in season of the night,
He sent a flaming fire to give them light,
And brought his people forth triumphantly ;

At their desire he sent them quails to eat,
He gave the bread of heaven to them for meat,
Water to drink when they required, he
Made streams from the hard rock flow plenteously ;
The Lord his promises remembering,
Gave them possession of the heathen lands,
That they might keep his statutes and commands ;
Praise him therefore O Jacob ! loud hosannas sing.

PSALM CVI.

Oh ! give thanks to your God for he is gracious,
His mercy endureth for ever more,
Blessed and prosperous are the righteous,
Who seek his favour and his name adore ;
With thy people O Lord ! remember me,
For I rejoice indeed in their felicity :

We sinned like our fathers ; the red sea
Bore witness to their incredulity,
The wonders done in Egypt they forgot,
The mercies showed them remembering not,
How God rebuk'd the sea in his goodness,
And led them through, as through a wilderness,
Their enemies the water whelmed on,
Of whom saved alive there was not one,

They saw, believed then, and gave him praise,
But soon returned to their evil ways !
Tempting the Lord there in the wilderness,
Who sent them meat even to loathingness ;
They rose on Moses and Aaron his saints,
Then perished Dathan and Abiram in their tents,
The fire consumed all their company ;
They made a calf, a molten image they
In Horeb worshipping a calf that eateth hay,
Impious similitude of heaven's high majesty :
Then they forgot their God, the great I AM !
And all his wonders in the land of Ham,
They heeded not his counsel nor command,
Their thoughts were turn'd from the promis'd pleasant land,
To punish them his arm was up-raised,
Throughout the earth they had been scattered,
But Moses his servant for mercy cried,
Before them stood and turn'd his wrath aside ;
Then unto Baal-peor themselves they join'd,
And bow'd and eat the offerings of the dead ;
Plagues seized them, Phinces stood forth, he pray'd,
And stopt its progress and its fury staid ;
At the waters of strife they transgressed,
And Moses there for their sakes suffered ;

They spar'd the heathen, following their ways,
They idols worshipped in those bad days,
Their sons and daughters gave for sacrifice,
Whose blood was shed in streams before their eyes.

At length the anger of the Lord burst forth,
And they dispersed were throughout the earth,
Yet he redeemed them from time to time,
As oft they fell, they fell from crime to crime,
Yet after all in their adversity,
He looked down upon them with pity,
He turn'd men's hearts their sufferings to behold,
Remembering his covenant of old.

Deliver us out of captivity,
O God of Isra'! blessed ever more,
That we again may witness thy glory;
Amen say O ye people! and his name adore.

PSALM CVII.

PART FIRST.

Great is the God we worship and adore,
His mercy endureth for ever more:
Praise him O ye! who out of a strange land,
Who from the east, the west, the south, the north,

He gathered together, and led forth,
In safety led you forth with a strong hand ;

Ye who sojourning in the wilderness,
By hunger, thirst, and by disease assail'd,
Whose flesh was weary, and whose spirit fail'd,
Lamenting your sad state in bitterness ;

In trouble then you called on the Lord,
And he delivered you in your distress ;
By the right way he led his chosen race,
And gave them lands, and cities, and a dwelling-place ;

Oh ! that mankind would therefore praise his name,
Declare his goodness and his mighty deeds proclaim.

PART SECOND.

Their souls who seek him shall be satisfi'd,
The hungry soul be filled with goodness ;
But they in iron bands and fetters bound,
Who sat in darkness in the vale of death,
Because they had rebelled in their hearts,
Nor heeded the commands of the Most High ;
Therefore dishonoured and fallen low,
Fainting with toil, they heavy burthens bore,
Their souls abhor'd the food they had to eat,
Oppress'd by famine or forbidden meat ;

In trouble then they called on the Lord,
And he deliver'd them in their distress ;

Smote and asunder broke the iron bars,
And burst the gates of brass and set them free ;
Oh ! that mankind would therefore praise his name,
Declare his goodness, and his mighty deeds proclaim.

PART THIRD.

They who go down into the sea in ships,
Who occupy themselves in the great sea,
They do behold the secrets of the deep,
They view the wondrous works of the Most High,
At his command the stormy winds arise,
And lift the world of waters to the skies,
The ships therein are lifted up to heaven,
Then plunged to the bottom of the sea,
The souls of men dissolve and melt away,
With terror struck they know not what they do ;
In trouble then they call upon the Lord,
And he delivers them from their distress ;
He makes the tempests cease and stills the waves,
And brings them to their haven in safety ;
Oh ! that mankind would therefore praise his name,
Declare his goodness and his mighty deeds proclaim.

PART FOURTH.

He maketh fruitful fields a wilderness,
In which are dried up the water springs,

A land of plenty barren thus becomes,
For the misdeeds of them who dwell therein ;
Again he sendeth floods, the streams o'erflow,
And pools of water stand in the dry ground,
That men may plough and sow, and plant the earth,
With vine-yards and enjoy the fruit thereof,
And should they be diminished and brought low,
By war, by famine, or by pestilence ;
In trouble then they call upon the Lord,
And he delivers them in their distress ;
Again they multiply and fill the land,
He makes the household like a flock of sheep ;
Oh ! that mankind would therefore praise his name,
Declare his goodness and his mighty deeds proclaim.

PSALM CVIII.

My heart is ready O Lord ! my heart is ready,
To praise its great Creator with a song ;
Awake Oh ! lute and harp, I will awake
Myself, amidst the people right early,
And praise his name all the nations among,
Who reigns exalted high above the earth,
His mercy, love, and truth shall be shown forth ;

He in his holiness for Isra'ls sake,
Unto his chosen people kindly spake;
I will rejoice therefore—Sichem I will divide,
Saccoth thy valley melted out shall be,
Lo ! Gilead, Manasses too belong to me,
Ephraim standeth stoutly on my side,
With Judah and her laws I will abide ;
Edom, Moab, Philistia once great,
Our latches shall unloose, and stoop to wash our feet :
Who unto the strong city, leads our armies, who ?
Even to Edom, is it not our God ? for he
Will fight the battle and subdue the foe ;
Vain is the arm of man, his strength is vanity,
But led by Him the host returns triumphantly.

PSALM CIX.

The mouths of the deceitful, O my God !
And their false lips are opened on me,
They watch my steps, they compass my abode,
And fight against my honour subtlety,
Evil for good to me awarding still,
Hatred they have returned for good-will,
When I besought them kindly, wept and pray'd,
They met my love with scorn, and cursed me, and said :—

“ Let Satan over him be ruler, and
An adversary still at his right-hand ;
Condemned in judgment let him always be,
And unto him be showed no pity,
Few be his days, and without hope his life,
His children fatherless, forlorn his wife,
Let them be vagabonds, and beg their bread,
In days of famine seeking to be fed,
Their labour and ought left let all consumed be,
By strangers and oppressors in vile slavery,
In the next generation, branch and root,
Let his posterity be clean put out ;
His father's sins before mankind display,
Nor let his mother's faults be done away,
Memorials of them that gave him birth ;
That all may perish from off the face of the earth :”

My foe thus persecutes a grieved heart,
No mercy shows, but acts a tyrant's part ;
With curses he is as with raiment drest,
He blesseth none, and is himself unblest,
As water in his bowels this shall be,
Or oil into his bones ; with curses he
Is covered as if with cloak or stole,
Or girdle always girding him withall :

While thus it happens to my enemy,
I seek my God, for sweet is his mercy,
Mine is a hapless and a wounded heart,
Hence like a shadow I do now depart,
To move as the grass-hopper I assay,
My knees are weak, my flesh is dried away,
And I am a reproach to them that see
My state, they stare and shake their heads at me ;
Help, help O Lord ! for we have felt thy hand,
And judgments which lay heavy on the land,
Thy chosen people then shall praise thy name,
And all their foes be covered with shame,
And as for me I will rejoice and stand,
Before the Lord, the ruler still of my right-hand.

PSALM CX.

Jehovah said unto my Lord, sit thou
At my right hand, until thine enemies
I make thy footstool, and their rulers bow
To thee, for thou in Zion shalt arise,
Thy coming will be as the morning dew,
And kings shall free-will offerings make and sacrifice ;
Jehovah swear ! (the Lord who changeth never)
The order of Melchisedek for ever,

Thou shalt be priest thereof ; and his right-hand
Will wound the kings and princes of the land ;
For thee I gentiles judge and princes slay,
And drive the idols and their worshippers away.

PSALM CXI.

I will give thanks in the congregation,
And with his servants praise the Lord Most High,
Whose works are wonderful the earth upon,
To them that call upon him faithfully,
All good and gracious is the Holy One,
His truth endureth everlastingly.

For ever mindful of his covenant,
He gave the heathen lands for heritage,
Lands which he did to our forefathers grant,
Whom he led safe amidst the gentiles rage,
And sent them succour when they were in want ;
His truth endureth from age to age !
The fear of God shall all my thoughts employ,
It is the way to wisdom, happiness, and joy.

PSALM CXII.

The man that feareth God blessed is he,
For in the commandments he takes delight,

Upon the earth his seed shall mighty be,
Raised from dark obscure to splendid light,
Rich is his house and full of plenteousness,
For ever more endures his righteousness ;
The good man fears the Lord and standeth fast,
Amid reproach, contumely, and scorn,
He shrinks not at adversities' rude blast,
But firm in honour shall exalt his horn,
His foes shall 'nash their teeth, abash'd to see
The righteous rejoicing in his prosperity.

PSALM CXIII.

Praise ye Jehovah! praise his holy name,
Blessed from this time forth for ever more,
Throughout all lands is spread abroad his fame,
All Israel his majesty adore,
From the sun's rise to setting of the same,
The gentile tribes bow down his name before ;
Although exalted high above all kings,
He cares and looketh down on earthly things,
The poor he maketh princes, kings he casteth down ;
A goodly race shall now with joy their mothers crown.

PSALM CXIV.

When Isra'l from the land of Egypt came,
The house of bondage, suffering, and shame;
The Lord ruled, with Judah he abode,
Power and dominion he spread abroad,
The sea saw it and fled, and Jordan's stream
Was driven back, while the high mountains seem
To bound like rams, like lambs the little hills,
Amazement the surrounding nations fills ;
What ailed thee that thou fledest O sea !
And thou O Jordan's stream ! what ailed thee,
Ye mountains that like rams ye seem'd to bound,
And as young sheep the little hills around ;
The earth in presence of the Lord was rent and shook,
He turned the solid rock into a gushing brook.

PSALM CXV.

Not unto us ; to Jehovah give praise,
Upright and merciful are all his ways,
He sitteth in the heavens, him all obey ;
Yet where dwelleth your God the heathens say
Their gods with silver and with gold inlaid,
Are by the hands of cunning workmen made,

Months, eyes, and ears they're furnished withal,
Yet see not, hear not, nor with voices call ;
When raised up, erect the monster stands,
But walketh not, nor handleth with its hands,
They that make them, are like to them, but dust,
And such are those who in them put their trust ;
The house of Aaron, and Israel all,
Place their whole trust in God, on him they call ;
Mindful of them, he showereth blessings on
The sons of Israel and of Aaron,
Who dwell in peace, having his powerful aid,
By whom the heavens and the earth were made,
Jehovah sits on high, and reigns in heaven,
The earth he to the sons of men hath given,
(When in the grave the dead do not his name adore)
Praise him O Israel ! praise him for ever more.

PSALM CXVI.

I am well pleased, Jehovah attends,
And hears my humble prayers, and peace and comfort sends :
Sorrows and death around encompass'd me,
And on my soul the pains of hell laid hold,
Then heaviness I felt and misery,
And on my God I for deliverance call'd,

For righteous and gracious is he,
To help the poor, the simple, and the old ;
Then turn to peace my soul, dismiss thy fears,
For from the grave he hath delivered me,
My feet from falling, and mine eyes from tears ;
Whilst I do live I will walk uprightly,
(Death of a saint him to his God endears)
Him I will praise, and call his name upon,
And drink of the cup of his salvation,
My vows in presence of the people pay,
His servant I will his commands obey,
I am his servant, son of his hand-maid,
Sacrifice of thanksgiving I have paid,
Before the people and in the sanctuary,
My God worshipping, O Jerusalem ! in thee.

PSALM CXVII.

Oh ! praise the Lord, ye heathen clap your hands,
Praise him all nations, praise him in all lands ;
His love for us increaseth more and more,
His truth endures for ever, praise your God therefore.

PSALM CXVIII.

O praise the Lord! for he is gracious,
His mercy endureth for ever more,
That he is gracious, Israel declare,
For his mercy endureth for ever,
And let the house of Aaron now declare,
That his mercy endureth for ever,
Yea let all them that fear the Lord declare,
That his mercy endureth for ever :

Unto my prayers he opened his ear,
My enemies therefore I will not fear,
In kings or princes put no confidence,
But trust in God, he is a sure defence ;
The nations compassed me round about,
The Lord subdued them and drove them out,
They came, they kept me in on every side,
But fled vanquish'd, when on the Lord I cried,
They came like angry bees, swelled with ire,
And were extinct like thorns consum'd with fire ;
The voice of gladness is our tents among,
The Lord is my salvation, strength, and song,
His right-hand causeth fearful things to be,
But though in wrath he hath but chasten'd me,
I shall not die, I shall not die but live,
To praise his name, and thanks for all his mercies give :

Open ye wide the gates of righteousness,
That I may enter in and pay my vow,
This is the way that leadeth unto bliss,
The servants of the Lord will enter now,
To thank him for the goodness he hath shown,
This day is his, he is supremely wise.
What was refus'd is now the corner stone,
Marvellous are his doings in our eyes,
Blessed are all his saints, for void of blame
They seek his house, and enter in his name,
Offerings bind to the horns of the altar,
He having shown light to them from afar ;
O praise the Lord ! for he is gracious,
His mercy endureth for ever more.

PSALM CXIX.

PART FIRST.

Who keep thy laws O Lord ! blessed are they,
For in thy testimonies they delight,
To thy commandments strict observance pay,
And shun what is displeasing in thy sight ;
I would that I like them were thus upright,
Thy laws and statutes duly to obey,

Observe thy ordinances all aright,
With heart unfeign'd and pure by night and day.

PART SECOND.

Where shall a young man find true wisdom's way ?
In the word and the law of the Most High ;
I will not from thine ordinances stray,
But serve thee with my whole heart stedfastly,
Thou art O God ! my comforter and stay,
Thy statutes I will study to walk by,
Thy testimonies shall be my delight,
Compar'd to them, riches are poor and worthless quite.

PART THIRD.

Assist me O my God ! in peace to live,
Open mine eyes unto thy heavenly law,
A stranger here, understanding Oh give !
That my soul may thy will and judgments know ;
My pleasure is in thy testimonies,
Thy word is sweet and precious in mine eyes ;
Princes have sat and spoken against me,
But in their pomp and pride they shall confounded be.

PART FOURTH.

My soul cleaveth to dust, Oh ! quicken me,
Teach me O Lord ! thy statutes to obey,
Proclaim thy wondrous works, and honour thee ;
Through heaviness my spirits melt away,

My comforter and my protector be,
Thy laws and thy judgments before me lay,
For thou hast left my heart at liberty,
And thy words shall direct my steps in wisdom's way.

PART FIFTH.

Thy statutes and thy laws O Lord ! to me impart,
That I may them observe, and keep with my whole heart,
With joy and gladness thy commandments I require,
For to walk in thy ways hath been my soul's desire,
Mine eyes shall be turned away from vanity,
When thy commandments are established in me,
Rebuke me if thine ordinances I transgress,
Oh ! quicken me to walk in paths of righteousness.

PART SIXTH.

To me O Lord ! salvation send,
For in thy promises I put my trust,
I will be faithful to the end,
And follow counsels just,
Now that I am at liberty,
Thy statutes before kings I will declare,
And haste to thy sanctuary,
My heart is fixed there.

PART SEVENTH.

Look down O Lord ! remember me,
On thee I trust in misery,

Although the proud deride,
Thy word my rule and guide shall be,
Thy judgments everlastingly,
Shall with my soul abide ;
Thy laws have been my songs from youth to age,
In the night season, in my pilgrimage.

PART EIGHTH.

O Jehovah ! my Saviour be,
My spirit cleaveth unto thee,
The voice of thy testimony,
My heart rejoiceth still ;
The wicked uprightness despise,
But at midnight I will arise,
To praise my God, and means devise
His statutes to fulfil.

PART NINTH.

My God is gracious and kind,
Pouring true knowledge on my mind,
According to his word ;
The proud when in prosperity,
Are swelled out with vanity,
Forgetting thee O Lord !
In trouble thy statutes I learn to know,
Dearer to me than gold or silver is thy law.

PART TENTH.

Thy hands O Lord ! have made and fashion'd me,
My spirit yearns to understand thy law,
This they that fear thy name rejoice to see,
For my sincerity and faith they know ;
Unto my God I will for refuge flee,
When the wicked scorn and resentment show,
In their own pride they shall confounded be,
Whilst I thine ordinances learning, cleave thereto.

PART ELEVENTH.

My soul O Lord ! longeth for salvation,
My weary eyes to thee for comfort look,
When I shall be my foes avenged on,
I now am as a bottle in the smoke,
To injure me they evil counsel took,
Laid snares and digged pits my paths upon,
But thy commandments I have not forsook,
Nor the words which are written in thy holy book.

PART TWELFTH.

Thy works O Lord ! throughout the world endure,
From generation to generation,
Thy word ruleth the heavens, thy faith is sure,
The earth thou fixed on its foundation,
There it abideth stedfast and secure,
Thy laws are my delight to think upon,

To them the wicked and the proud shall bend,
For thy ordinances endure unto the end.

PART THIRTEENTH.

My heart O Lord ! delighteth in thy law,
All my studies thy statutes are to know,
Wiser than aged men thus am I grown,
In wisdom I excel, the learned own,
My steps to evil have not turn'd aside,
Thy judgments have been my directing guide,
Unto my ears all thy sayings are sweet,
Yea, sweeter to my mouth than honey is to eat.

PART FOURTEENTH.

Thy law are precious to my sight,
And to my feet a shining light,
Walking in ways that are upright,
According to the word ;
My free-will offerings shall be,
Memorials of thy glory,
Whose statutes and testimony,
Delight my heart, O Lord !

PART FIFTEENTH.

The wicked are perverse, they go astray,
And unto vain imaginations yield,
They are cast out as dross, they flee away,
For God is my defender and my shield,

He hath establish'd me, he is my stay,
His statutes unto me have been reveal'd,
Yet before him my flesh, trembleth with fear
And is afraid, his judgments are indeed severe.

PART SIXTEENTH.

I cleave to that which is lawful and right,
The proud oppressors shall do me no wrong,
That which is good O Lord! is my delight,
For thy salvation I have looked long ;
Because the wicked thy servants among,
Despise thy law, stretch forth thy arms therefore,
Better than gold is thy protection strong,
For all deceitfulness I utterly abhor.

PART SEVENTEENTH.

Thy word it giveth knowledge to the blind,
Thy works are wonderful among mankind,
Look down O Lord! order my steps aright,
For thy statutes are precious in my sight,
Deceit shall not enter into my mind,
When of thy countenance I see the light,
In me no wickedness thou then shalt find,
Thy laws and ordinances shall be my delight.

PART EIGHTEENTH.

The Lord our God is righteous and true,
His righteousness endureth ever more ;

My zeal consumeth me, with grief I view
Men who forget his goodness to adore;
I am of small account and young, therefore,
Trouble and woe of me have taken hold,
Oh ! grant me understanding to review
Thy law, that I may live to worship, and wax old.

PART NINETEENTH.

I call upon my God with my whole heart,
His commandments to keep, for help I call;
I raise my voice to Him at early morn,
The night watches bear witness to my cry ;
According to thy loving-kindness hear
My prayers O Lord ! as wont in days gone by,
My foes are full of malice and draw near,
But thou art nigh at hand my foes I need not fear.

PART TWENTIETH.

In this distress and misery,
O Lord ! help and deliver me,
For salvation I fly to thee,
Thy promises, thy law,
The ungodly my soul oppress,
And glory in their wickedness ;
But I will not thy laws transgress,
I long thy will to know.

THE PSALMS.

147

PART TWENTY-FIRST.

Princes have persecuted me,
But my soul cleaveth unto thee,
In thy word I great riches see,
And falsehood I abhor ;
My God I seven times a day,
To praise thy righteousness essay,
Thou know'st my heart, and see'st my way,
Thy judgments I adore.

PART TWENTY-SECOND.

Give me to understand thy laws O Lord !
Then shall my tongue salute thee with a song,
Thy statutes to record,
For thy salvation I have thirsted long,
Let my soul live in thy protection strong,
According to thy word,
Like a lost sheep I wander in the night,
Yet thy laws are my consolation and delight.

PSALM CXX.

Avenge my wrongs O Lord ! thou knowest well,
Their lips and tongues false and deceitful are ;
Woe unto me that I with Mesech dwell,
And have long lived in tents of Kedar,

They follow strife, and when of peace I tell,
Armour put on and make ready for war.

PSALM CXXI.

KING.

I will lift up mine eyes, for help unto the hills,
Even to thee O God ! who made the heavens and earth ;

CHORUS.

He will not suffer thee to be moved, O King !
Who keepeth Israel, nor slumbereth nor sleeps,
He is thy keeper, thy defence at thy right-hand,
The sun by day or moon by night, shall not harm thee,
For he beholds thy going out and coming in,
To guard thy steps from this time forth for ever more.

PSALM CXXII.

Our feet shall stand in thy gates, O Jerusalem !
And enter gladly the house of the Lord our God :
Jerusalem at unity
Within itself, is that city,
Up unto it the people go,
Their love and gratitude to show,

In it is fix'd the judgment seat,
There stands the house David great,
Within its walls is plenteousness,
And peace within its palaces ;
The tribes with joy assemble there,
My brethern and companions dear,
Peace and prosperity shall bless.

PSALM CXXIII.

Servants look up unto their masters, and
Maidens for good to their mistresses hand ;
So do mine eyes wait on the Lord Most High,
Who dwelleth in the heavens, who rules the sky,
Us to deliver from this misery,
From pride, oppression, and contumely.

PSALM CXXIV.

Had God not been with us, Isra'l may say,
We had been swallowed in the deep sea,
Or to the proud abandoned as prey,
For sacrifice or for captivity,
As a bird from the fowler's snare, have we
Made our escape, from famine and from dearth,

Our bonds are broken, and at liberty
We worship him who made the heavens and earth.

PSALM CXXV.

All they that put their trust in the Most High,
Shall stand like Zion everlastingly ;
Around Jerusalem the mountains stand,
So stands the Lord, and guards his chosen land,
Heathens inherit not there nor increase,
But Israel therein shall dwell, and be at peace.

PSALM CXXVI.

When the Lord turned our captivity,
We left the heathen land triumphantly, !
All eyes with joy did beam,
Our mouths with laughter fill'd and song,
As rushing streams we pass'd along,
'Twas like a pleasant dream ;
As one bearing good seed, but having fears,
Returns—and with him sheaves luxuriant bears,
So we reaped in joy, what we had sown in tears.

PSALM CXXVII.

The builders' build, the watchmen watch in vain,
Unless protection from on high they gain,
In vain, unless they find assistance there,
Sit late, rise early, eat the bread of care ;
The godly sleep in peace,
Children born unto the Lord's heritage,
They are as arrows in a giant's hand,
With quiver full of them, and counsel sage,
A man shall in the gate with honour stand,
And prosper and increase.

PSALM CXXVIII.

Oh ! fear the Lord, and walk thou in his ways,
Who plenty gives, and joy and happy days ;
Thy wife like as the fruitful vine shall be,
Thy babes around thy table thou shalt see,
Like olive shoots increase,
The Lord will bless thy house out of Zion,
Thou shalt rejoice in thy generation,
And Isra'l be at peace.

PSALM CXXIX.

My foes from my youth up, Isra'l may say
Have fought, but not prevailed against me,
And they for ever shall confounded be,
For battle when they do themselves array ;
On the house top as droughted corn,
By man nor gathered is, nor shorn,
But withereth away ;
So they that hate thee, Oh ! Zion,
Are with derision looked on.
" God speed you," none shall say.

PSALM CXXX.

When in distress, and grief, and misery,
For help O Lord ! my soul waiteth on thee,
To thee I raise my voice ;
Then Israel out of captivity,
Shall by thy mighty arm redeemed be,
And in thy name rejoice.

PSALM CXXXI.

No haughty looks have I,
Humble, content, and mild,

I seek not after things for me too high,
Weak as a child, even a weaned child;
Give ear O Israel! your God adore,
Even from this time forth for ever more.

PSALM CXXXII.

The covenant O Lord ! that David made,
Remember—when he vow'd a vow and said;
“ Mine eyelids have not slept nor slumbered,
Nor will I rest nor climb up to my bed,
’Till for thine ark a resting-place is found,
Wherein to bend the knee on holy ground,
There worship thee, with hearts contrite and true,
And to the mighty God of Jacob bow ;
Oh ! let thy priests in righteousness awake,
Rejoice and sing, even for David’s sake ;”

From thine anointed now turn not away ;
To David thou saidest, “ while ye adhere,
And your sons’ sons my commandments obey,
You shall establish’d be for ever more,
Jerusalem be pleasing in my sight,
And in Zion to dwell be my delight,

The people of the land with plenty bless,
And send abundance to her palaces;
Remember David and exalt his horn,
The law shall to his feet a lantern be,
The crown and sceptre shall his seed adorn,
While clothed is with shame the fallen enemy."

PSALM CXXXIII.

It's good to see brethern together dwell in unity,
On them the blessing of the Lord shall be ;
'Tis pleasant as is the precious ointment,
From Aaron's head and beard perfuming his garment,
Or gentle dew descending from Hermon,
To fertilize the mountains of Sion.

PSALM CXXXIV.

Oh ! praise the Lord, ye servants of the Lord,
Ye that by night keep watch with one accord,
In the sanctuary your voices raise,
And God who made the heavens and earth, in Zion praise:

PSALM CXXXV.

Oh ! praise the Lord, ye servants of the Lord,
Within the courts of his house, ye that stand,
The loving-kindness of his name record,
Who unto Jacob gave the promis'd land,
Great is the Lord, and mighty is his word,
He ruleth heaven and earth, the deep sea, and
Clouds, lightnings, winds, and rain, are all at his command.

Our God great kings and kingdoms overthrew,
And gave to Israel their heritage,
Egypt's first-born, of man and beast he slew,
He sent signs to abate proud Pharaoh's rage,
Whose heart was hardened, and harder grew ;
Shon, and Og, and Canaanites engage,
Israel to oppose, in vain they battle wage.

The Lord is great ! vain are those deities,
Though made of gold, and gorgeous they appear,
Their tongues speak not, they see not with their eyes,
Their mouths breathe not, nor have they ears that hear,
Though made by man they list not to his cries ;
Praise God therefore Oh ! Israel with holy fear,
Oh Levi ! in Zion arise, and praise him there.

PSALM CXXXVI.

Oh! praise the Lord, for gracious is he,
And his mercy, endureth for ever,
Give thanks unto the God of gods O ye!
For his mercy, endureth ever more,
Unto the Lord of lords all thankful be,
Lo! his mercy, endureth for ever;
Wonders he wrought, the heavens his wisdom made,
And the earth he upon the waters laid,
For his mercy, endureth for ever,
He made the sun to fill the world with light,
The moon and stars to shine and rule the night,
For his mercy, endureth for ever;

Egypt's first-born he smote throughout the land,
And brought forth Jacob with a mighty hand,
For his mercy, endureth ever more,
Whilst Pharaoh perished in the red sea,
He led his people forward in safety,
For his mercy, endureth for ever,
When Amorites and Canaanites arose,
With arm outstretched he espous'd our cause,
For his mercy, endureth ever more,
Sehon and Og in vain fierce battle wage,
He gave their kingdoms for our heritage,
For his mercy, endureth for ever,

We were delivered thus from our foes,
By him who all the wants of mankind knows,
For his mercy, endureth ever more,
Give thanks all Israel with one accord,
To him of gods the God, and lords the Lord ;
For his mercy endureth ever, ever more.

PSALM CXXXVII.

When on the river's banks of Babylon,
We sat in presence of the enemy,
We hung our harps the willow trees upon,
And wept Zion ! when we remember'd thee ;
Then they who held us in captivity,
Our bitter foes demanded mirth and song,
And us to sing, invited tauntingly,
Thy songs O Zion ! heathen men among,
Yea, in a heathen land, the Lord's own holy song :
How shall we sing those songs in this strange land ?
O Zion ! if I ever thee forget,
Or thee Jerusalem ! may this right-hand
Its cunning and its minstrelsy forget ;
And be my tongue for melody unfit,
Unless Jerusalem I bear in mind ;
Oh think on Edom, Lord ! remember it,

Cried against us, in our day unkind,
" Down with the city, all her sons for captives bind :"
Daughter of Babylon ! Oh ! thou shalt see
E'er long, thy state will be as ours is now,
And wasted when thou art with misery,
When with oppression all thy people bow,
Then sorrow will be seated on thy brow ;
To serve thee as thou served us, will rise
Men fill'd with ire, and range thy regions through ;
Then wilt thou listen to thy children's cries,
They will be seized on, or slain before thine eyes.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

I will give thanks O Lord ! with my whole heart,
And in thy holy temple worship thee,
For thou my Saviour and defender art,
And heard'st me when I was in misery,
Kings bow their heads before thy majesty,
The Lord is great, he humbleth all mankind,
He stays the fury of the enemy,
He gives his servants strength and peace of mind,
His mercy is for ever more, and unconfin'd.

PSALM CXXXIX.

The Lord beheld my ways, and search'd me out,
My words and secret thoughts were brought to view,
He was about my bed, my paths about,
My down lying, my rising up he knew,
For in my mother's womb he fashion'd me,
Before, behind, and on me laid his hand ;
His works are great and glorious to see,
And far too wonderful for me to understand ;

From thy presence O Lord ! where can I go ?
Or whither shall I from thy Spirit flee ?
Should I climb up to heaven, thou art there,
Descend to hell and thou art there also,
Should the wings of the morning favour me,
To gain the outermost parts of the sea,
I feel thine hand it leads me everywhere ;
Let darkness cover me, if I should say,
Forthwith my night is turned into day,
For darkness is not darkness in thy sight,
Alike to thee is darkness and the light ;

I fearfully and wondrously am made ;
The substance of my bones and my body,
And reins, formed of dust imperfectly,
Yet fashion'd were in secret by thine aid,

For so O Lord ! thou had'st ordained it,
And in thy Book of Life are all my members writ ;
Thy mercies O my God ! when I awake,
Are manifold and precious in mine eyes ;
But before thee, the ungodly may quake,
And tremble who against thy statutes rise,
With lips profane thy name in vain they take,
I hate their counsels and their words despise ;
Prove me O Lord ! lest from thy paths I stray,
And lead me forward in thine everlasting way.

PSALM CXL

Save me O Lord ! when evil men among,
Their tongues are deadly as the serpent's tooth,
They stir up strife and discord all day long,
They are as poison in the adder's mouth,
On mischief bent, around they compass me,
They lay their snares, and nets in secret spread,
But Jehovah will my defender be,
And in the day of battle shield my head,
The wicked shall not prosper in their pride,
Their evil deeds on their own souls will lay,
They shall not long upon the land abide,
Their dwelling places will be swept away ;

Hot coals shall be their portion in the pit,
Consumed they shall not arise from it;
Avenge thy saints O Lord! maintain their cause,
That they may live to praise thy name with loud applause.

PSALM CXLI.

How me O Lord! my voice I raise to thee,
I guard my lips, and watch my words, that they
Like to an evening sacrifice may be,
And lifted hands be incense in thy sight;
Oh! let me not in evil things delight,
To eat forbidden meats, to idols stray,
Me rather let the just in friendship smite,
But not their precious blows to break my head:
Our bones about the grave lie scattered,
Even like wood hewed, broken, and spread,
In this waste-place should I my judges meet,
Thy greetings they shall hear, for they are sweet,
The Lord will surely guide my steps aright,
From snares and pits made by the ungodly,
(Who caught in their own traps) let that their portion be.

PSALM CXLII.

In heaviness of heart and misery,
I pour forth my complaints to the Most High ;
For nets are spread, and snares are laid for me,
And I have not a place found where to fly,
Nor friendly help on which I may rely,
I am an outcast weak and fallen low,
But God is my refuge, to him I cry,
If he his saving health on me bestow,
The upright will espouse my cause, and kindness show.

PSALM CXLIII.

Hearken ! O Lord Most High !
And enter not in judgment against me ;
In thy sight justified who can be,
Oh ! hear me then and listen to my cry ;
I am oppress'd and smitten to the ground,
Alone, in darkness, and as one long dead,
My soul is vex'd, my heart is desolate,
My spirit also waxeth weak, and it
Is as one going down into the pit ;
Yet on my God as in times past I wait,
And thirst like one in sandy places found,
Who faints and finds no place to lay his head ;

Hide not thy face O Lord ! -longer from me,
But lead me in the paths of righteousness,
At early morning send and set me free,
Confounding all my foes, workers of wickedness.

PSALM CXLIV.

Blessed be the Most High, who in his might
Delivered me, he is my sword and shield,
He taught my hands to war, fingers to fight,
Quelling the people's rage, he made them yield :

Lord what is man, what are the sons of man ?
(For they as brief as shadows pass away)
Yet them thou hast regarded in the plan,
Of thine eternal laws, which all creation sway :

Open thy heavens, descend upon the ground,
When thou touchest the mountains they shall smoke,
Thine arrows shoot, thy lightnings cast around,
The ungodly shall fall beneath thy stroke,
They did with lies and vanity abound,
But the Lord came and freed us from their yoke,
A song to him therefore I now will sing,
And praise his name on a ten-stringed lute,
For David he with victory hath crown'd,
And from the sword and perils sav'd the king,

Our sons will now like plants expand and shoot,
 Like columns fair which in the temples stand
 Our daughters will be seen and grace the land,
 With stores well fill'd our garners will be found,
 Our oxen strong to labour, our sheep yield,
 Thousands and thousands in the grassy field;
 Within our walls no mourners then will be,
 No spoil, no leading in captivity,
 The people are well off in such a case,
 For the Lord is their king, and rules the happy race.

PSALM CXLV.

Jehovah I will magnify,
 And praise the name of the Most High,
 Him honour and adore,
 And generations yet unborn,
 With gifts his temple shall adorn,
 And give him thanks at early morn,
 And praises ever more;

His wondrous works, his majesty,
 His loving-kindness, his glory,
 I will abroad proclaim,
 He reigneth from eternity,
 His kingdom without end shall be,

He's mightiest of the mighty,

Earth witnesseth his fame ;

All eyes do wait with one accord

For sustenance, on thee O Lord !

Thou openest thine hand,

And in due season succour yields,

Pours forth abundance on the fields,

And gladdens all the land ;

The ways of God are righteous all,

He's near to them who on him call,

Call on him faithfully,

He scattereth abroad his foes,

To the upright he favour shows,

His graciousness my spirit knows,

He rules transcendently.

PSALM CXLVI.

Whilst I have being I will praise the Lord,

Proclaim his goodness, his mercies record ;

Trust not in man, in princes put no trust,

Their breath it goeth forth, men pass away,

Their thoughts all perish and they turn to dust ;

But they who trust in God, blessed are they ;

God made the earth, the heavens, and the sea,
His covenant he kept mankind among,
The hungry fed, help'd him that suffer'd wrong,
Gave sight unto the blind, and set the captive free;
The fallen man he raiseth, he doth bless
The stranger, widow, and the fatherless,
Confounding the workers of wickedness;
From generation to generation,
The God of Jacob is thy king, rejoice Zion.

[PSALM CXLVII.

Sing praises to Jehovah, it is sweet,
It is a pleasant and a joyful thing;
He will thy walls Jerusalem secure,
And thy children Israel thither bring,
He sendeth medicine their griefs to cure,
He healeth those amongst them sick at heart,
Thanksgivings on the harp to him are meet;
He spoil'd the foe, espousing Jacob's part;
His power is great, his wisdom undefin'd,
The stars are number'd in his mighty mind;
He covereth the firmament with clouds,
The rains descend, and for the use of man,

Green herbs spring up ; for the beasts of the field,
He maketh grass upon the mountains grow,
He feeds the ravens, all birds of the air,
And cattle wait on him and call for food ;
Rejoice Jerusalem, he strengthen'd thee,
With Iron bars and with fastnings complete,
Gave peace unto thy borders and plenty,
He fill'd thy garner with the flour of wheat ;

His word runs swiftly throughout all the earth,
His might is in the air and waters found,
Hoar frost like ashes, snow as soft as wool
He sends, and ice, his frost who can endure,
Yet at his bidding these all melt away,
The tempest rages and the waters flow ;

The Lord to Jacob did his word reveal,
His ordinances unto Israel,
He hath not dealt with other nations so,
The heathens have not knowledge of his sacred law.

PSALM CXLVIII.

Praise, praise the Lord, the high and mighty Lord ;
Ye host celestial, all ye angels bright,
Ye sun and moon, ye countless stars of light,
Ye waters and the firmament above ;

He spake, and ye were made at his command,
Ye were created by his mighty hand,
Praise, praise therefore his name with one accord ;
His laws endure for ever, and they prove
His power, his goodness, and unbounded love ;

Praise Him Oh ! earth, praise Him Oh ! deep profound
Fire, hail, and snow, the tempest, wind, and storm,
Mountains and vallies, fruit and cedar trees,
Birds of the air, and insects of the ground,
Beasts wild in forests, or in folds at ease,
All, all obey him, and his will perform :

The judges, rulers, princes, and the king,
Young men and old, the tender children, and
Matrons and daughters of this favour'd land ;
All to Jehovah their glad homage bring :

He of his people is the strong defence,
He blesseth Jacob and exalts his horn,
The righteous praise him for his excellence,
His glories fill the world, and the high heavens adorn.

PSALM CXLIX.

A new song to the Lord ye people sing,
Jacob rejoice, he is your mighty King,
With tabret, harp, and dance, his goodness praise,
He to great glory will his people raise,

He is well pleas'd at their prosperity,
He to his saints hath given the victory,
Out of their mouths they have declar'd his word,
With a two-edged sword by his commands
They conquer heathen kings, and bind their hands
With chains, and their nobles with iron bands,
Praise ye the name of the Most High, throughout all lands.

PSALM CL.

Praise God in all his majesty,
His wisdom and his laws profound,
Praise him in the sanctuary,
Praise him unto the trumpet's sound,
Oh ! praise him on the harp and lute,
His praise on the organ repeat,
In praise let dance and tabret suit,
Oh ! praise the Lord with cymbals sweet ;
Let all creatures that breathe with one accord,
Bow down, worship, and praise thy holy name O Lord.
